cho-let'e-lin (kō-lĕt'ē-lĭn), n. [Gr. χολή bile + τέλος completion.] Physiol. Chem. A yellowish red pigment formed in the oxidation of bilirubin. It is the end product in Gmelin's test for bile pigments with nitric acid.
cho'li-amb (kō'lĭ-ămb), n. [L. choliambus, Gr. χωλιαμβος; χωλός lame + ἰαμβος an iambus.] Pros. An iambic verse of six feet (iambic trimeter) having a spondee or trochee in the last foot; a scazon.
cho'li-am'bic (kō'lĭ-ăm'bĭk), a. [Gr. χωλιαμβικός.] Of or pert. to the choliamb. — n. A choliamb; — usually in the pl.
chol'ic (kŏl'ĭk), a. [Gr. χολικός, from χολή bile.] Physiol. Chem. Pertaining to, or obtained from, the bile.
cholic acid, specif., a crystalline, monobasic, hydroxy acid, $C_{24}H_{40}O_5$, obtained as a cleavage product of taurocholic and glycocholic acids.
cho'line (kō'lĭn; kŏl'ĭn; -ēn; 184), n. Also -lin. [Gr. χολή bile.] Physiol. Chem. A deliquescent crystalline base, $C_5H_{15}O_2N$, widely distributed among animal and plant products, in which it is found combined in the form of lecithins. Chemically it is hydroxyethyl-trimethyl-ammonium hydroxide. Called also bilineurine, sincaline, amanitine. It was formerly confused with neurine.
chol'la (chŏl'yä; 194), n. [Sp. cholla, chola, head.] An arborescent very spiny cactus (Opuntia fulgida) of the southwestern United States and Mexico.
chol'o-hæ'ma-tin, -he'ma-tin (kŏl'ō-hē'mȧ-tĭn; -hĕm'ȧ-tĭn), n. [Gr. χολή bile + hæmatin.] Physiol. Chem. A pigment, with a characteristic absorption spectrum, developed in ox or sheep bile when exposed to air for some time.
chol'oid (kŏl'oid), a. [Gr. χολή bile + -oid.] Physiol. Related to, or resembling, the bile.
cho-loi'dic (kō-loi'dĭk) } a. Physiol. Chem. Pertain-chol'oi-din'ic (kŏl'oi-dĭn'ĭk) } ing to or designating an acid formed as an intermediate product in the formation of dyslysin from cholic acid.
‖ cho'mage' (shō'mȧzh'), n. [F. chômage.] 1. Stoppage; cessation (of labor).
2. A standing still or idle (of mills, factories, etc.).
3. Dead season (in certain trades).
4. Insurance of wages when work is stopped.
chomp (chŏmp), v. i. & t. To chew or eat loudly and greedily; to champ. Dial. Eng. & Colloq. U. S.
Chon'do-den'dron (kŏn'dō-dĕn'drŏn), n. [NL.; Gr. χόνδρος a gram (of wheat or spelt) + δενδρον tree; — referring to the joints of the stem. The proper spelling, Chondrodendron, was adopted by later botanists.] Bot. A small genus of high-climbing menispermaceous woody vines, natives of Brazil and Peru. The drug pareira brava is obtained from the root of C. tomentosum.
chon'dral (kŏn'drăl), a. [Gr. χόνδρος cartilage.] Anat. Pertaining to cartilage or a cartilage.
chon'dri-fi-ca'tion (kŏn'drĭ-fĭ-kā'shŭn), n. Physiol Formation of, or conversion into, cartilage.
chon'dri-fy (kŏn'drĭ-fī), v. t. & i.; -FIED (-fīd); -FY'ING (-fī'ĭng). [chondro- + -fy.] To convert, or be converted, into cartilage.
chon'dri-gen (-jĕn), n. [chondro- + -gen.] Physiol. Chem. The substance composing the matrix of cartilaginous tissue. It is now regarded as a mixture of collagen with other compounds.
chon-drig'e-nous (kŏn-drĭj'ē-nŭs), a. Affording chondrin.
Chon-dril'la (-drĭl'ȧ), n. [NL., fr. L. chondrille Spanish succory, Gr. χονδριλη a kind of endive or chicory.] Bot. A genus of Old World cichoriaceous herbs having large basal, mostly pinnatifid, leaves, small stem leaves, and few-flowered heads with spinulose achenes. C. juncea is the gum succory.
chon'drin (kŏn'drĭn), n. [Gr. χόνδρος cartilage.] Physiol. Chem. A substance obtainable from cartilage. It is a mixture whose chief ingredient is gelatin.
chon'drin-ous (kŏn'drĭ-nŭs), a. Containing or yielding chondrin.
chon'drite (kŏn'drīt), n. [Gr. χόνδρος a grain (of wheat or spelt), cartilage.] Min. A meteoric stone characterized by the presence of chondrules.
chon-drit'ic (kŏn-drĭt'ĭk), a. Min Granular; pert. to or having the granular structure characteristic of chondrites.
chon-dri'tis (-drī'tĭs), n. [NL.; chondro- + -itis.] Med. Inflammation of cartilage.
chon'dro- (kŏn'drō-), chondr-. Combining forms from Greek χόνδρος, a grain (of wheat or spelt), cartilage; specif. meaning, composed of cartilage, as in chondrocranium; or connection with cartilage, as in chondroglossus.
chon'dro-blast (-blăst), n. [chondro- + -blast.] Anat. A cell which produces cartilage.
chon'dro-cra'ni-um (-krā'nĭ-ŭm), n.; L. pl. -CRANIA (-ȧ). [chondro- + cranium] Anat. The cartilaginous cranium; also, the part of the adult skull derived therefrom. See CRANIUM. — chon'dro-cra'ni-al (-ăl), a.
chon'dro-dite (kŏn'drō-dīt), n. [Gr. χονδρώδης granular.] Min. A member of the humite group, yellow to red, often occurring in granular form in a crystalline limestone.
chon'dro-dit'ic (-dĭt'ĭk), a Min. Characterized by the presence of chondrodite, as, a chondroditic limestone.
chon'dro-gen'e-sis (-jĕn'ē-sĭs), n. [chondro- + -genesis.] Anat. & Physiol. The development of cartilage. — chon'dro-ge-net'ic (-jē-nĕt'ĭk), a.
chon'droid (kŏn'droid), a. [chondro- + -oid.] Resembling cartilage.
chon-dro'i-tin (kŏn-drō'ĭ-tĭn), n. Physiol. Chem. A gummy nitrogenous substance, having the properties of a monobasic acid, and existing in cartilage in its sulphuric acid compound. By hydrolysis it yields acetic acid and chondrosin.
chondroitin-sulphuric acid, an acid found esp. in cartilage and in ox kidney, urine, etc., and formed in decomposition of chondromucoid. It is a white amorphous powder, yielding on hydrolysis chondroitin and sulphuric acid.
chon-dro'ma (kŏn-drō'mȧ), n.; L. pl. -DROMATA (-drō'mȧ-tȧ; -drŏm'ȧ-tȧ) [NL.; chondro- + -oma.] A cartilaginous tumor or growth.
chon-drom'a-tous (-drŏm'ȧ-tŭs; -drō'mȧ-tŭs), a. Pertaining to, or of the nature of, cartilage or chondroma.
chon'dro-mu'coid (kŏn'drō-mū'koid), n. [chondro- + mucoid.] Physiol. Chem. A white amorphous powder, a constituent of the matrix of cartilage. It is a compound of a proteid with chondroitin-sulphuric acid.
chon'dro-phar'yn-ge'us (-fär'ĭn-jē'ŭs), n. [NL.; chondro- + Gr. φάρυγξ pharynx.] Anat. The muscular fibers arising from the lesser cornu of the hyoid bone and forming part of the middle constrictor of the pharynx. — chon'dro-pha-ryn'ge-al (-fȧ-rĭn'jē-ăl; -fär'ĭn-jē'ăl), a.
Chon-droph'o-ra (kŏn-drŏf'ō-rȧ), n. pl. [NL. See CHONDRO-; -PHORE.] Zoöl. A superfamily of dibranchiate, ten-armed cephalopods having an internal horny shell, as the squids. — chon-droph'o-rous (-rŭs), a. chon'dro-pro'te-id (kŏn'drō-prō'tē-ĭd), n. [chondro- + proteid.] Physiol. Chem. Any of a group of nonphosphorized glyco-proteids that yield by hydrolysis chondroitin-sulphuric acid and a proteid. Chondromucoid is the most important.
Chon-drop'ter-yg'i-i (kŏn-drŏp'tĕr-ĭj'ĭ-ī), n. pl. [NL.; chondro- + Gr. πτέρυξ, -υγος, wing, fin.] Zoöl. An old group of fishes characterized by soft and cartilaginous fin rays. It included the elasmobranchs, sturgeons, and even the lampreys, though later restricted to the elasmobranchs. — chon-drop'ter-yg'i-an (-ăn), a. & n. — chon-drop'ter-yg'i-ous (-ŭs), a.
chon'dro-skel'e-ton (-skĕl'ē-tŭn), n. [chondro- + skeleton.] Anat. A cartilaginous skeleton.
chon-dros'te-an (kŏn-drŏs'tē-ăn) } a. [See CHONDROSTEI.]
chon-dros'te-ous (kŏn-drŏs'tē-ŭs) } Zoöl. a Having a cartilaginous skeleton. b Of or pertaining to the Chondrostei. — chon-dros'te-an, n. One of the Chondrostei.
Chon-dros'te-i (-tē-ī), n. pl. [NL.; chondro- + Gr. ὀστέον bone.] Zoöl. An order of ganoid fishes consisting of the sturgeons and paddlefishes and a greater or less number of their extinct allies. Cf. HETEROCERCI.
chon'dro-ster'nal (kŏn'drō-stûr'năl), a. [chondro- + sternal.] Anat. Pertaining to the costal cartilages and sternum.
chon-drot'o-my (kŏn-drŏt'ō-mĭ), n. [chondro- + -tomy.] The cutting or dissection of cartilages.
chon'drule (kŏn'drōol), n. [Dim. fr. Gr. χόνδρος. See CHONDRO-.] Min. A peculiar rounded granule of cosmic origin, usually consisting of enstatite or chrysolite. Chondrules occur in deep-sea sediments, and are also found embedded more or less abundantly in the mass of many meteoric stones, called chondrites.
chon'drus (kŏn'drŭs), n.; pl. -DRI (-drī). [NL., fr. Gr. χόνδρος cartilage.] 1. Min. = CHONDRULE
2. [cap.] Bot. A small genus of red algæ of the family Gigartinaceæ, having rather coarse branching fronds. The most important species is C. crispus, the carrageen; — so called in allusion to the tough thallus. See CARRAGEEN.
choose (chōōz), v. t.; pret. CHOSE (chōz); p. p. CHO'SEN (chō'z'n), CHOSE (Obs.); p. pr. & vb. n. CHOOS'ING. [ME. chesen, cheosen, AS. cēosan; akin to OS. kiosan, D kiezen, G kiesen, Icel. kjōsa, Goth. kausan, L. gustare to taste, Gr. γεύεσθαι, Skr. jush to enjoy. Cf. CHOICE, GUST taste.] 1. To make choice of, to select; to take by way of preference from two or more objects offered; to elect; to decide (to do something) from inclination or preference; — often with infinitive object; as, to choose the less of two evils; he chooses to go to London.
Chose me for a humble friend. Pope
2. To think proper; to please; — with infinitive object.

1. In Greek drama, a company of singers or chanters, acting as a unit, and in the developed tragedy occupying a rôle fluctuating between that of participants in, and that of interpreters of, the action. The earliest chorus consisted of a group of singers under a leader who sang the dithyramb at the Dionysia. In 534 B. C. Thespis introduced an actor who held a dialogue with the leader of the chorus. Æschylus introduced a second actor, and Sophocles a third, and with this increase threw the burden of dramatic interest upon the actors. The chorus, however, was still an organic element of the drama, though with Euripides and later writers the rôle of the chorus became more passive and extraneous, the choral ode forming a running commentary on the play. The number of the Æschylean chorus was twelve; Sophocles increased it to fifteen. Cf. TRAGEDY.

2. The part of the drama sung by the chorus, typically consisting of a series of odes arranged for antiphonal singing, interspersed between the scenes of the play.

Chris'ti-an'i-ty (krĭs'chĭ-ăn'ĭ-tĭ; krĭs-chăn'-, 277), n. [ME. crstiente, OF. crestiienté, F. chrétienté, fr. L. christianitas.]

1. The body of Christian believers; Christendom. Obs.

2. The religion of Christians; the system of doctrines and precepts taught by Christ, hence, the body of beliefs, practices, and sentiments developed from the teachings and life of Christ.

Christianity is the revelation of God through Jesus Christ whereby reconciliation and a new spiritual life in fellowship with Himself are brought to mankind. G. P. Fisher.

It has long been laid down, and has only recently been questioned, that "Christianity is part of the law of England" (Cowan v. Milbourn, L. R. 2 Ex. 230, 234). T. E. Holland.

3. With pl. A Christian religious system. Emerson.

4. State or fact of being a Christian; Christian character or spirit; practical conformity of one's inward and outward life to the spirit of the Christian religion.

5. Eccl. Ecclesiastical jurisdiction, as in Court of Christianity, an ecclesiastical court; hence specif. applied to ruridecanal chapters and ruridecanal jurisdictions, whence Dean of Christianity, orig., a rural dean, now retained in the title of particular rural deaneries, or Deaneries of Christianity, comprising now only the parishes of certain cities or towns, as Exeter, Lincoln, Leicester. Eng. Cyc. E. D.

Chris'tian-i-za'tion (krĭs'chăn-ĭ-zā'shŭn; ĭ-zā'-), n. Act or process of Christianizing.

Chris'tian-ize (krĭs'chăn-īz), v. t.; CHRIS'TIAN-IZED (-īzd); CHRIS'TIAN-IZ'ING (-īz'ĭng). [Cf. F. christianiser, L. christianizare, fr. Gr. χριστιανίζειν.] 1. To make Christian; to convert to Christianity; as, to Christianize pagans.

2. To imbue with, or adapt to, Christian principles.

Christianized philosophers. I Taylor.

Chris'tian-ize, v. i. To adopt the character or belief of a Christian; become Christian; play the Christian. Rare.

Chris'tian-like', a. Becoming to a Christian.

Sufferings . . . patiently and Christianly borne. Sharp

Christ'less (krīst'lĕs), a. Without Christ or faith in Christ; unchristian. Tennyson — Christ'less-ness, n.

Christ'ly, a. Of or pertaining to Christ; Christlike. — Christ'li-ness (-lĭ-nĕs), n.

Christ'mas (krĭs'măs), n. [Christ + mass.] 1. An annual church festival, kept on December 25 in memory of the birth of Christ. It is celebrated generally by a particular church service, and by special gifts, greetings, and hospitality, and in most Christian communities is a legal holiday. Vaguely, the season about Christmas Day; Christmastide.

2. Something connected with the celebration of Christmas, as a gift.

3. Evergreens, as the European holly, used for decorations at Christmas. Colloq., Eng.

Christmas berry. The fruit of the toyon (Heteromeles arbutifolia); also, the shrub itself. See TOYON.

Christmas box. a A closed box with a slit for the reception of coins, in which money is deposited for a person or persons (as servants, formerly apprentices, begging friars, etc.) who are supposed to open it on Christmas. b A box into which gamesters put a part of their winnings, to be given away at Christmas. Obs. c A present or small gratuity given at Christmas, esp. to public servants, as letter carriers, policemen, etc. d A box of Christmas presents.

Christmas bush. a An Australian cunoniaceous tree (Ceratopetalum gummiferum), often used in Christmas decorations; — called also officer plant, from its bright red appearance, and Christmas tree. b In Bermuda, a naturalized cæsalpiniaceous shrub (Cassia bicapsularis) used for hedges.

Christmas creeper. Any creeping or trailing evergreen used in Christmas decorations.

Christmas daisy. An American aster (Aster grandiflorus) cultivated in England, where it blooms in autumn. Eng.

Christmas Eve. The evening before Christmas Day.

Christmas fern. A North American evergreen polypodiaceous fern (Polystichum acrostichoides), the fronds of which are much used for decoration in winter.

Christmas rose A European ranunculaceous plant (Helleborus niger), often cultivated for its handsome flowers, resembling single roses, produced in winter.

Christ'mas-tide' (krĭs'măs-tīd'), n. [Christmas + tide time] The season of Christmas.

Christmas tree. 1. A small evergreen tree, set up indoors, decorated with ornaments, bearing presents for distribution, and illuminated on Christmas Eve or Christmas night.

2. a In Australia, the Christmas bush. b In New Zealand, the pohutukawa.

Chris'to- (krĭs'tō-). Combining form from Gr. Χριστός, or L. Christus, Christ; as in *Christo*centric, *Christo*logy, etc.

Chris'to-cen'tric (-sĕn'trĭk), a. [Christo- + centric.] Theol. Having Christ as its center; making Christ the center about which all things are grouped, as in theology, religion, or history; tending toward Christ as the central object of thought or emotion.

Chris-tol'o-gy (krĭs-tŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [Christo- + -logy.] That department of theology which treats of the personality, attributes, or life of Christ; a doctrine or theory about Christ. — Chris'to-log'i-cal (krĭs'tō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a. — Chris-tol'o-gist (krĭs-tŏl'ō-jĭst), n

Chris-toph'a-ny (-tŏf'ā-nĭ), n.; pl. -NIES (-nĭz). [Christo- + Gr. φαίνειν to show.] One or all the appearances of Christ after resurrection, as recorded in the Gospels.

Chris'to-pher, Saint (krĭs' tō-fẽr), A Christian martyr, and one of the patron saints of Christendom. According to legend, he made a vow to serve only the mightiest, and finding that the emperor feared the Devil, and the Devil feared the cross, he left their service for Christ's. He was of gigantic stature, and, as a penance, devoted himself to carrying pilgrims across a river. One night he carried over a small child who weighed so heavily upon him that he nearly bore him down. The child was Christ, and he gave his servant the name Christopher, i. e., Christbearer. His day is celebrated on May 9 in the Eastern Church, and on July 25 in the Roman Catholic Church.

Christ's Hospital (krists). A famous English public school founded by King Edward VI. in 1553 as a hospital for orphans and foundlings, and formerly located on the site of Greyfriars' Monastery, Newgate Street, London, but now removed to Horsham in Sussex. It is often called the Bluecoat School and its pupils bluecoat boys, from the long blue woolen gowns worn by the latter. Lamb, Coleridge, Leigh Hunt, and other famous men were educated here.

Christ's'-thorn', n. a Any of several prickly or thorny shrubs of Palestine, esp. Paliurus aculeatus, Zizyphus spina-christi, and Z. vulgaris. The last bears the jujube, and is thought to have been the plant used for the crown of thorns. b The apocynaceous shrub Carandas carandas.

chro'a-tol (krō'ā-tŏl, -tōl), n. [Gr. χρόα, χροιά, skin + 2d -ol.] A dark green, oily preparation of pinene hydriodide, $C_{10}H_{16}$·2HI, resulting from action of iodine on turpentine. It is used externally in skin diseases, as psoriasis.

-chro'ic (-krō'ĭk). A suffix denoting colored: see -CHROOUS.

chro'ma (krō'mə), n. [Gr. χρῶμα color.] Color intensity or purity; degree of freedom from gray. See COLOR.

chrom'æs-the'si-a, or -es-the'si-a (krōm'ĕs-thē'sĭ-ə), n. [NL; chroma- + Gr. αἴσθησις feeling.] Psychol. Natural chris'tal. † CRYSTAL.

Christ'dom (krĭst'dŭm), n. Christendom Rare.

Chris'te e-le'i-son (krĭs'tē ĕ-lē'ĭ-sŏn), [Cf. KYRIE ELEISON.] Eccl. Christ have mercy; — Greek words used as a petition in the Mass, etc., in connection with the petition Kyrie eleison.

Chris'ten (krĭs'tĕn), a. & n. Earlier form of CHRISTIAN.

Chris'ten-mas, n. Christmas. Obs or Dial. Eng.

Christ'hood (krĭst'hŏŏd), n. State of being Christ; Messiahship.

Chris'ti-an'a (krĭs'tĭ-ăn'ə), n. [L. Christiana, fem. of Christianus. See CHRISTIAN.] 1. Fem. prop. name G. Christiane (krēs-tē-ä'nĕ), Christel (krĭs'tĕl). — Dim Chrissie (krĭs'ĭ). 2. In Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," the wife of Christian, who goes with her children to rejoin her husband in the Celestial City, guided by Mr Great-heart.

christian d'or. [After Christian, a king of Denmark + F. d'or of gold.] See COIN.

chris'tian-ite (-chən-īt), n. [after Christian Frederic, of Denmark; + after Christian VIII., of Denmark.] Min a A variety of anorthite from Vesuvius. b Phillipsite Chris'tian-iz'er (-īz'ẽr), n One who Christianizes.

Chris'ti-a'no- (krĭs'chĭ-ā'nō-) A combining form from L. Christianus or Gr. Χριστιανός, Christian: as in Chris'tian-og'ra-phy (krĭs'chăn-ŏg'rə-fĭ), n. A description of Christians. Obs Chris'ti-cide (krĭs'tĭ-sīd), n. [Christ + -cide.] A killing of Christ.

Chris'ti-form, a Christlike. R

Chris-ti'na (krĭs-tē'nə), n. [Cf. F. Christine. See CHRISTIANA] Fem. prop name. F. Christine (krēs-tēn'), It. & Sp Cristina (krēs-tē'nä); Pg. Christina (krēs-tē'nə); G Christine (krēs-tē'nĕ). — Dim. Chrissie (krĭs'ĭ), Xina (zē'nə).

Chris-ti'no. Var. of CRISTINO.

2. To decorate with evergreens for Christmas. Colloq., Eng.

Christ'mas-ing, n. 1. To celebrate Christmas; also, Eng, to sell Christmas decorations, or, U. S., to buy Christmas gifts Colloq

Christmas cactus. See CRAB CACTUS.

Christmas flower. a The winter aconite b The Christmas rose. c The green hellebore. [pine]

Christmas king. The Lord of Misrule. Obs.

Christmas Lord. The Lord of Misrule. Obs.

‖ Chri'sto et ec-cle'si-æ (krĭs'tō ĕt ĕ-klē'zĭ-ē). [L.] For Christ and the church.

chris-to'fle (krĭs-tōf'l), chris-tof'le, n. [After Christofle et Cie, a firm of Parisian jewelers.] A kind of plated nickel alloy resembling alfenide.

Chris-tol'a-try (krĭs-tŏl'ə-trĭ), n. [Christo- + -latry.] Worship of Christ as divine [OM.]

Chris'to-pher (krĭs'tō-fẽr), n. [ME. Cristofre, L. Christophorus (prob. through OF. Christofle, F. Christophe), fr Gr. Χριστοφόρος, prop., bearing Christ.] 1 Masc. prop. name. L. Christophorus (krĭs-tŏf'ō-rŭs); F Christophe (krēs'tŏf'); It. Cristoforo (krēs-tō'fō-rō), Sp Cristóbal (krēs-tō'bäl; 133); Pg. Christovão (krēs'tō-voun'); G. Christophorus (krēs-tō'fō-rŏos), Christoph (krēs'tōf). — Dim. Kester, Kit, Chris.

2. An image or figure of St. Christopher Obs.

3. A bearer, like St. Christopher, of Christ.

chris'to-phine' (krĭs'tō-fēn'), n. = CHAYOTE.

Christ's'-eye' (krĭsts'ī'), n. A European asteraceous herb (Inula oculus-christi).

Christ's herb. The Christmas

chro'ma (krō'mə), n. [L., fr Gr. χρῶμα See CHROMATIC.] Music. a A half step, or the chromatic sign for it Obs. b Var. of CROMA Obs.

chro-maf'fin (krō-măf'ĭn), a. [chromo- + L. affinis having affinity for.] Zool. Designating pigmented cells found in the walls of certain blood vessels in cyclostomes and many fishes, and believed to represent the medul-and involuntary association of colors with words, letters, numbers, sounds, etc. It is a variety of synæsthesia.

chro'mate (-māt), n. [See CHROME.] A salt of chromic acid.

chro'mate, v. t.; CHRO'MAT-ED (-māt-ĕd); CHRO'MAT-ING (-māt-ĭng). To treat or impregnate with a chromate or dichromate, esp. with potassium dichromate.

chro-mat'ic (krō-măt'ĭk), a. [L. chromaticus, Gr. χρωματικός, suited for color (in music, chromatic), fr. χρῶμα, χρώματος, color; also, a variation of diatonic music consisting of the use of tones altered in pitch; akin to χροιά color, χρως skin, color of the skin: cf. F. chromatique.] 1. Of or pertaining to color or colors; consisting of color; produced by, or made in, a color or colors. 2. Full of color; highly colored. 3. Music. Proceeding by the smaller intervals (half steps or semitones) of the scale, instead of the regular intervals of the diatonic scale; containing tones foreign to a given key or harmony. 4. Biol Capable of being colored by staining agents. chromatic aberration. Optics. See ABERRATION, 4. — c. accent, Phon., pitch accent. See ACCENT, 1. — c. alteration of a tone, Music, the raising or lowering of its pitch by a half step, — indicated by an accidental, singly or in combination. — c. chord, Music, a chord having tones foreign to the key of the passage in which it occurs. — c. fiber or fibre, Biol., the long coiled fiber of chromatin into which the nucleus resolves itself during the early stages of mitosis, and which afterward breaks up into chromosomes. — c. half step or semitone, Music, the adjacent half step written upon the same degree, as C to C sharp, but not C to D flat. — c. interval, Music, a normal scale interval raised or lowered by a half step. — c. printing, printing in colors. — c race, Anthropol., an ethnic group determined by similarity of complexion and type of hair. — c. scale. Music. See SCALE. — c. semitone. = CHROMATIC HALF STEP. — c. sign, Music, an accidental, whether single or double. — c. spectrum. See SPECTRUM. — c. sphere, Biol., in mitotic cell division, the body formed by the coalescence of the chromosomes after the anaphase. — c thread. = CHROMATIC FIBER.

chro-mat'ic, n. Music. An accidental, or note affected by it.

chro-mat'ics (-ĭks), n. The science of colors; that part of optics which treats of the properties of colors.

chro'ma-tin (krō'ma-tĭn), n. [Gr. χρῶμα, χρωματος, color.] Biol. A protoplasmic substance found in the nucleus of cells, which stains deeply with basic stains, as carmine and hæmatoxylin. It is regarded by many as the physical basis of heredity. Chemically it consists largely of proteid compounds of nucleic acid. It exists in small granules, variously arranged in the resting stage of the nucleus, which previous to the mitotic division of the cell become aggregated in a definite manner into chromosomes. The formation of these chromosomes and their subsequent splitting in the process of mitosis indicates that the chromatin is not a homogeneous substance, but that the granules in different parts of the chromosome are of different kinds, which must be distributed qualitatively as well as quantitatively to the new cells resulting from the division. See MITOSIS, CHROMOSOME, FERTILIZATION.

chro'ma-to- (krō'ma-tō-), chromat-. Combining forms from Greek χρῶμα, χρώματος, color. Cf. CHROMO-.

chro'ma-to-graph' (-grăf'), n. [chromato- + -graph.] An instrument for the production of composite color tones by the use of party-colored revolving disks.

chro'ma-tom'e-ter (-tŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [chromato- + -meter.] a A color diagram or chart so arranged as to serve as a scale by which to determine the classification or character of colors. b An instrument for measuring color perception. c A chromometer.

chro'ma-top'a-thy (-tŏp'a-thĭ) } pathia; chromato- + -pathia, -pathy.] Med. Any disease of the pigmentary system of the skin. — chro'ma-to-path'ic (-tō-păth'ĭk), a.

chro'ma-to-phore' (krō'ma-tō-fōr') n. [chromato- + -phore.] 1. Zoöl. A pigment cell, esp. one capable of changing its form or size, causing changes of color in the translucent skin by bringing the pigment near the surface, or, by contracting, concentrating it in the deeper layers. They are highly developed and numerous in cephalopods. 2. Bot. One of the color bodies or plastids found commonly in plant cells. They include both the green chloroplasts and the red or yellow chromoplasts, and vary greatly in form and size. In certain lower algæ they afford sustenance to the organism, which reduces them to colorless bodies. In Spirogyra they form spiral bands, and in the diatoms a special structure known as an endochrome plate.

chro'ma-toph'o-rous (-tŏf'ō-rŭs) } ic, -phorous.] Zoöl. Containing pigment; specif., of or pertaining to, or of the nature of, a chromatophore.

chro'ma-top'sĭ-a (-tŏp'sĭ-a; -shă), n. [NL.; chromato- + -opsia.] Med. A morbid condition of vision in which objects are seen unnaturally colored.

chro'ma-top-tom'e-ter (-tŏp-tŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [chromato- + optometer.] Physiol. An apparatus for measuring the sensitiveness of the eye to color.

chro'ma-top-tom'e-try (-trĭ), n. Physiol. Determination of sensitiveness of the eye to color.

chro'ma-to-scope' (krō'ma-tō-skōp'), n [chromato- + -scope.] 1. Astron. A reflecting telescope, part of which is made to rotate eccentrically, to produce a ringlike image of a star. It is used in studying scintillation of stars. 2. An instrument for combining rays of different colors to form compound colors.

chro'ma-tos'co-py (krō'ma-tŏs'kŏ-pĭ), n. [chromato- + -scopy] Physics. a The art of color testing. b The study of the scintillation of stars by means of the chromatoscope.

chro'ma-to'sis (-tō'sĭs), n. [NL.; chromato- + -osis] Pigmentation; specif., abnormal pigmentation of the skin.

chro'ma-trope (krō'ma-trōp), n. [chroma- + -trope.] 1. Physics. An instrument for exhibiting certain chromatic effects of light (depending upon the persistence of vision and mixture of colors) by means of rapidly rotating disks variously colored. 2. A device in a magic lantern or stereopticon to produce kaleidoscopic effects. 3. = CHROMOTROPE, 1.

chro'ma-type (-tīp), n. [chroma- + type.] Photog. A picture made upon paper sensitized with potassium dichromate or some other chromium compound, also, the process of making such pictures. Cf. CARBON PROCESS.

chrome (krōm), n. [F., fr. Gr. χρῶμα color.] 1. Chromium. 2. Dyeing. Potassium dichromate.

chrome iron ore. = CHROMITE, 1.

chrome (krōm), v. t.; CHROMED (krōmd); CHROM'ING (krōm'ĭng) [From CHROME, n.] Dyeing. To treat with a solution of potassium dichromate.

chrome alum. Chem. A dark violet substance, $KCr(SO_4)_2{\cdot}12H_2O$, chromium potassium sulphate, analogous to, and crystallizing like, common alum. It forms violet or green solutions. One of its uses is as a mordant.

chrome aventurine Glass containing minute disseminated crystals of chromium oxide. See AVENTURINE, 1.

chrome black. A black produced by dyeing with logwood after chroming chrome green. Any of several green pigments, consisting essentially of chromic oxide or hydroxide or some chromic salt, used by artists and house painters, in printing wall paper, etc. Cheap imitations are frequently sold under the same name.

chrome orange. A pigment consisting essentially of normal and basic lead chromates, usually prepared by boiling chrome yellow with an alkali.

chrome red. Any pigment, as Derby red, prepared from the basic chromate of lead.

chrome steel. An alloy of chromium with ordinary steel. It is fine-grained and very hard, but deteriorates more rapidly than ordinary steel.

chrome yellow. 1. A brilliant pigment essentially neutral lead chromate, $PbCrO_4$. It is subject to alteration. 2. Mordant yellow. See DYE.

chro'mic (krō'mĭk), a. Chem. Pertaining to, or obtained from, chromium; — said of those compounds of chromium in which it exhibits its higher valences.

chromic acid. a An acid, H_2CrO_4, analogous to sulphuric acid, not readily obtained in the free state, but forming well-known salts, the chromates. These are as a rule yellow, and those of barium and of the heavy metals are insoluble. b Chromic anhydride; — formerly so called. — c. anhydride, or chromium trioxide, a brilliant red crystalline substance, CrO_3, regarded as the anhydride of chromic acid. It is an extremely active oxidizing agent. — c iron = CHROMITE, 1. — c. oxide, a substance, Cr_2O_3, obtained as a green powder. See CHROME GREEN.

chro'mite (krō'mīt), n. 1. Min. A mineral of the spinel group composed of iron, chromium, and oxygen, $FeCr_2O_4$, usually iron-black and of submetallic or metallic luster, and occurring massive or sometimes in octahedrons. It is usually associated with serpentine. H., 5.5. Sp. gr., 4.32–4.57. Chromite is valuable as a source of chromium. 2. Chem. A salt of chromous acid.

chro'mi-um (-mĭ-ŭm), n. [NL. See CHROME.] Chem. A grayish white, comparatively rare metal, hard, brittle, and refractory; — so called from the varied colors of its compounds. Sp. gr., 6.8. Symbol, Cr; at. wt., 52.0. Chromium is found only in combination and principally in the mineral chromite. It was discovered by Vauquelin in 1797. The metal, which is isolated by reducing the oxide with carbon or aluminium, has no commercial use except as a constituent of chromium steel, but its compounds are used in dyeing, painting, etc. Chromium exhibits the valences two (chromous salts), three (chromic salts), six (chromates, etc.), and probably seven (perchromates).

chro'mo- (krō'mŏ-), chro'ma- (krō'ma-), chrom-. Combining forms from Greek χρῶμα, color. Cf. CHROMATO-.

chro'mo-chal-cog'ra-phy (-kăl-kŏg'rā-fĭ), n. [chromo- + chalcography.] Art of producing colored prints from copperplates. — chro'mo-chal'co-graph'ic (-kăl'kŏ-grăf'ĭk), a chro'mo-col-log'ra-phy (-kŏ-lŏg'rā-fĭ), n. The process of producing chromocollotypes. — chro'mo-col'lo-graph'ic (-kŏl'ŏ-grăf'ĭk), a.

chro'mo-col'lo-type (-kŏl'ŏ-tīp), n. [chromo- + collotype.] A colored collotype, in the making of which two or more films are used.

chro'mo-gen (krō'mŏ-jĕn), n. [chromo- + -gen.] 1. Physiol. Chem. An antecedent of a pigment; a substance which by contact with air, or by other agency, readily becomes a coloring matter. 2. Dyes. a A compound not itself a dye, but containing one or more chromophorous groups and so capable of becoming a dye by the introduction of hydroxyl, amidogen, or the like. b A colorless derivative of naphthalene which, when applied to wool and oxidized, dyes the wool brown. 3. Plant Physiol. The color contents of the plant body.

chro'mo-gram (krō'mŏ-grăm), n. [chromo- + -gram.] Photog. One of the three partial negatives used in the process of color photography.

chro'mo-lith'o-graph (-lĭth'ŏ-grăf), n. [chromo- + lithograph.] A picture printed in colors from a series of stones prepared by the lithographic process.

chro'mo-lith'o-graph, v. t. To make a chromolithograph of.

chro-mom'e-ter (krō-mŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [chromo- + -meter.] An instrument or apparatus for comparing the color of a substance with some standard, esp. so as to determine the degree of purity or per cent of some constituent; a colorimeter.

chro'mo-phane (krō'mŏ-fān), n. [chromo- + Gr. φαίνειν to show.] Physiol. A general name for the pigments present in the inner segments of the cones of the retina.

chro-moph'i-lous (krō-mŏf'ĭ-lŭs), a. [chromo- + -phil-ous.] Biol. Staining readily.

chro'mo-phore (krō'mŏ-fōr), n. [chromo- + -phore.] Org. Chem. Any group or residue (as NO_2, N_2, or CO) to whose presence decided color in a compound is attributed, and which, with the assistance of certain salt-forming groups (auxochromes), produces dyes. — chro-moph'o-rous (krō-mŏf'ŏ-rŭs), chro'mo-phor'ic (krō'mŏ-fŏr'ĭk), a.

The term "chromophorous group" . . is really a name employed to indicate an atomic condition common to a number of dy ostuffs The coloration of an organic substance does not depend solely on the chromophore, but must be regarded as the total effect of several factors G v Georgievics (trans.).

chro'mo-pho'to-graph (krō'mŏ-fō'tŏ-grăf), n. [chromo- + photograph.] A photograph in colors.

chro'mo-pho'to-lith'o-graph (-fō'tŏ-lĭth'ŏ-grăf), n. A photolithograph printed in colors.

chro'mo-plast (krō'mŏ-plăst), n. [chromo- + -plast.] Bot. A plastid containing red or yellow pigments. Chromoplasts give color to most flowers and fruits, the hue varying with the predominance of xanthophyll or carotin. In shape they resemble chloroplasts, or they may assume an angular form due to crystallization of the pigment. Chromoplasts arise by differentiation of rudimentary chromatophores, or by direct conversion of chloroplasts.

chro'mo-pro'te-id (-prō'tē-ĭd), n. [chromo- + proteid.] Physiol. Chem. One of a class of compounds of a proteid with a pigment, like hæmoglobin, containing iron or copper.

chro'mo-scope (krō'mŏ-skōp), n. [chromo- + -scope.] An optical instrument for combining colored images so as to produce a picture in natural colors.

chro'mo-some (-sōm), n. [chromo- + 2d -some.] Biol. One of the small bodies, ordinarily definite in number in the cells of a given species and often more or less definite in shape, into which the chromatin of a cell nucleus resolves itself previous to the mitotic division of the cell. See MITOSIS, CHROMATIN. In the male and female germ cells which conjugate in sexual reproduction, the number of chromosomes is reduced to half that characteristic of the species, in order that the conjugation may not double the number of chromosomes in the fertilized egg. The chromosomes are identified with the idants of Weismann's theory. See SEX, n., 1.

chro'mo-sphere (-sfēr), n. [chromo- + sphere.] Astron. A ruddy gaseous layer composed of incandescent hydrogen, helium, etc., surrounding the sun and enveloping the photosphere; also, a similar layer encircling a star. The solar chromosphere is visible at the time of a total eclipse, and may be studied with the spectroscope at any time. Portions of it are here and there thrown up into enormous flamelike tongues, called the solar prominences or protuberances. — chro'mo-spher'ic (-sfĕr'ĭk), a.

chro'mo-trope (-trōp), n. [chromo- + -trope.] 1. Any of several disazo dyes of different shades of red or violet, all of which are changed to blues or blacks on treatment with potassium dichromate; as, chromotrope 2R. 2. = CHROMATROPE, 1 & 2.

chro'mo-type (-tīp), n. [chromo- + -type.] 1. A sheet printed in colors by any process, as a chromolithograph. 2. A photograph in natural colors.

chro'mo-ty-pog'ra-phy (-tĭ-pŏg'rā-fĭ) } n. The art chro'mo-typ'y (krō'mŏ-tīp'ĭ; krō-mŏt'ĭ-pĭ) } of printing in colors. — chro'mo-ty'po-graph'ic (-tī'pŏ-grăf'ĭk; -tĭp'ŏ-), a. — chro'mo-typ'ic (-tĭp'ĭk), a.

chro'mous (krō'mŭs), a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from, chromium; — said esp. of compounds in which this element is bivalent.

chromous acid, a weak monobasic acid, $CrO{\cdot}OH$, obtained as a bluish gray powder.

chromium steel. = CHROME STEEL.

chromium trioxide. = CHROMIC ANHYDRIDE [YELLOW]

chromium yellow. = CHROME

chro'mo-blast (krō'mŏ-blăst), n. [chromo- + -blast.] An embryonic cell which develops into a pigment cell

chro'mo-col'lo-graph (-kŏl'ŏ-grăf), n [chromo- + collograph] = CHROMOCOLLOTYPE.

chro'mo-graph, n [chromo- + -graph.] A form of hectograph. — v. t. To copy by a chromograph.

chro'mo-lith (krō'mŏ-lĭth), n. A chromolithograph — chro'mo-lith'ic (-lĭth'ĭk), a chro-mol'y-sis (krō-mŏl'ĭ-sĭs), n. = CHROMATOLYSIS.

chro'mo-mere, n. [chromo- + -mere.] Biol One of the chromatin granules composing the chromosome, equiv. to the id of Weismann.

chro'mo-phyll, n. [chromo- + -phyll.] Bot. Vaguely, any coloring matter in plant cells chro'mo-plasm, n. [chromo- + -plasm.] Biol. The easily staining network of a cell nucleus; — equiv. to chromatin — chro'mo-plas'mic (-plăz'mĭk), a.

chro-mat'i-cal-ly, adv. of CHROMATIC.

chro'ma-to-dys-o'pi-a (-tō-dĭs-ō'pĭ-ă), n [NL.; chromato- + dys- + -opia.] Color blindness chro'ma-tog'e-nous (-tŏj'ē-nŭs), a. [chromato- + -genous.] Producing color.

chro'ma-tog'ra-phy (-tŏg'rā-fĭ), n A treatise on colors.

chro'ma-tol'o-gy (-tŏl'ŏ-jĭ), n. [chromato- + -logy.] The science of, or a treatise on, colors.

chro'ma-to-phil' (krō'ma-tō-fĭl'), or chro'ma-to-phile' (-fĭl'; -fīl'), chi "ma-to-phil'ic (-fĭl'-ĭk), a. [chromato- + -phil.] = CHROMOPHILOUS.

chro'ma-to-phil'i-a (-fĭl'ĭ-a), n. [NL.] Anat. The condition of being chromophilous.

chro'ma-toph'i-lous (-tŏf'ĭ-lŭs), a. = CHROMOPHILOUS.

chro'ma-to-plasm' (krō'ma-tō-plăz'm), n. [chromato- + plasm.] Biol. The colored portions of protoplasm; — a collective name for the pigment elements or color contents of cells.

chro'ma-to-pseu-dop'sis (-sū-dŏp'sĭs), n. [NL.; chromato- + pseudo- + -opsis.] Abnormal perception of color.

chro'ma-to-sphere' (-sfēr'), n. [NL.; fr Gr χρόμις a kind of fish] Syn of CICHLIDÆ.

chro'mi-des (krō'mĭ-dēz), n. pl [NL., fr. L chromis, Gr χρόμις, a sea fish] Zool. A group of spiny-finned fishes having united lower pharyngeal bones and but one nostril on each side, consisting of the families Cichlidæ and Pomacentridæ. — chro'mid (krō'mĭd), a & n.

chro-mid'i-um (krō-mĭd'ĭ-ŭm), n.; pl. -IA (-ă). [NL., dim. fr. Gr χρῶμα color.] = GONIDIUM, 1.

chro'mi-ole (krō'mĭ-ōl), n. [Gr χρῶμα color] Biol. One of the (assumed) minute chromatin granules of the chromomeres.

chro'mism (krō'mĭz'm), n. = CHROMATISM [GREEN.]

chro'mo-xy'lo-graph (krō'mō-zī'lō-grȧf), n. [chromo- + xylograph.] A print made by chromoxylography.

chromyl chloride. Chem. A fuming liquid, CrO_2Cl_2, of deep red color, obtained by distilling a dichromate with common salt and concentrated sulphuric acid. It is a powerful oxidizer.

chron'ic (krŏn'ĭk), a. [L. chronicus, Gr. χρονικός concerning time, from χρόνος time : cf. F. chronique.] 1. Chronological. Obs.

2. Continuing for a long time ; of a disease, of long duration, or characterized by slowly progressing symptoms ; — opposed to acute. Hence (of an invalid or of one having an unpleasant habit or characteristic or the like), having long had the affliction or habit ; confirmed ; inveterate ; as, a chronic sufferer from gout ; a chronic grumbler.

3. Continuous ; constant ; as, chronic war.

Syn. — See INVETERATE.

chron'i-cal (-ĭ-kȧl), a. 1. Chronological. Obs.

2. Chronic ; as chronical diseases; chronical ignorance. R.

chro-nic'i-ty (krō-nĭs'ĭ-tĭ), n. Chronic quality or condition, as of a disease.

chron'i-cle (krŏn'ĭ-k'l), n. [ME. cronicle, fr. cronique, OF. cronique, F. chronique, L. chronica, fr. Gr. χρονικά, neut. pl. of χρονικός. See CHRONIC.] 1. A historical register or account of facts or events disposed in the order of time ; a history ; esp., a bare or simple chronological record of events, without philosophic or literary treatment.

2. In general, a narrative; record , register ; account.

3. pl. [cap.] Two canonical books of the Old Testament which immediately follow 2 Kings. See also PARALIPOMENON, and OLD TESTAMENT.

Syn. — Register, annals. See RECORD.

chron'i-cle, v. t. ; -CLED (-k'ld) ; -CLING (-klĭng). To record in a history or chronicle ; to record ; to register. Shak.

chron'i-cle, v. i. To write, make, or compile chronicles.

chronicle history. Drama. A type of historical play usually founded upon the chronicles of England, as Shakespeare's "Henry V."

chron'i-cler (krŏn'ĭ-klẽr), n. A writer or compiler of a chronicle ; a recorder of events in the order of time.

chron'o-gram (krŏn'ō-grăm), n. [chrono- + -gram.] 1. An inscription, sentence, or phrase in which certain numeral letters, usually made specially conspicuous, on being added together, express a particular date or epoch, as in the motto of a medal struck by Gustavus Adolphus in 1632, — ChrIstVs DVX; ergo trIVMphVs,

— the capitals of which, added as numerals, make 1632.

2. The record or inscription made by a chronograph.

2. An instrument for measuring and recording time ; specif. : a An instrument consisting of a recording apparatus, as a stylus and revolving drum, connected with a clock or chronometer. It is used for recording the precise clock time of astronomical and other occurrences. The printing chronograph has an automatic printing mechanism. b An independent-seconds watch. c An instrument for measuring the velocity of projectiles, etc. Cf. CHRONOSCOPE.

chron'o-graph'ic (krŏn'ō-grăf'ĭk) } a. 1. Of or pertaining chron'o-graph'i-cal (-ĭ-kȧl) } to a chronograph.

2. Chronogrammatic. Rare.

chro-nog'ra-phy (krō-nŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. [Gr. χρονογραφία See CHRONOGRAPH.] 1. A description or record of past time ; history. Lambarde.

2. Chronology. Obs. R. North.

3. Rhet. The description of the time or season of the year for the sake of embellishment. Obs.

4. The making or writing of chronograms. Rare.

5. The measurement by graphic methods of intervals of time, as in studying the successive phases of a rapid and complex motion ; the use of the chronograph.

chron'o-i'so-ther'mal (krŏn'ō-ĭ'sō-thûr'mȧl), a. [chrono- + isothermal.] Meteor. Pertaining to or designating a diagram exhibiting the course of the mean monthly temperature of a place for each hour of the day.

chron'o-log'ic (-lŏj'ĭk) } a. Pertaining to chronology ;
chron'o-log'i-cal (-ĭ-kȧl) } containing an account of events in the order of time ; according to the order of time ; as, chronological tables. — chron'o-log'i-cal-ly, adv.

chro-nol'o-gist (krō-nŏl'ō-jĭst), chro-nol'o-ger (-jẽr), n. A person who investigates dates of events and transactions ; one skilled in chronology.

chro-nol'o-gize (-jīz), v. t. ; -GIZED (-jīzd) ; -GIZING (-jīz'ĭng). To arrange or give chronologically ; to make chronological.

chro-nol'o-gy (-jĭ), n. ; pl. -GIES (-jĭz). [chrono- + -logy : cf. F. chronologie.] 1. The science which treats of measuring time by regular divisions or periods, and which assigns to events or transactions their proper dates.

If history without chronology is dark and confused, chronology without history is dry and insipid A. Holmes.

2. A chronological table, list, or the like.

chro'mule (krō'mūl), n [chromo- + Gr ὕλη matter.] Bot. = CHROMOPHYLL.

chrom'y (krōm'ĭ), a. Abounding in, or tinged with, chrome

Chron., or chron. Abbr. Chronicles; chronological; chronology

chro'nal (krō'n ȧl), a. [Gr χρόνος time.] Of or pertaining to time Rare

chron'-an'a-gram (krŏn'ăn'ȧ-grăm), n An anagram of a chronogram, expressing the same date. Oxf E. D.

chron'i-con (-kŏn), n.; L pl. -CA (-kȧ). [Gr. χρονικόν, neut. sing. of χρονικός See CHRONIC.] A chronicle or chronology Obs.

‖ chro'nique' scan'da'leuse' (krō'nēk' skan'dȧ'lûz'). [F.] A chronicle of scandal.

chron'o-ba-rom'e-ter, n. A mercurial barometer hung as a pendulum and connected with clockwork so that the mean length of the mercury column may be observed or recorded through the mean rate of vibration.

chron'o-gram-mat'ic (krŏn'ō-grȧ-măt'ĭk), chron'o-gram-mat'i cal (-ĭ-kȧl), a. Pert. to, or containing, a chronogram.— chron'o-gram-mat'i-cal-ly, adv.

chron'o-gram'ma-tist (-grăm'ȧ-tĭst), n. A writer or maker of chronograms.

chro-nom'e-ter (krō-nŏm'ĕ-tẽr), n. [chrono- + -meter : cf. F. chronomètre.] An instrument for measuring time ; a timekeeper ; specif : a A portable timekeeper, with a compensation balance, and usually beating half seconds, — intended to keep time with great accuracy for use in astronomical observations, in determining longitude, esp. at sea, etc. ; — called specif. box chronometer and marine chronometer. b Music. A metronome.

chron'o-met'ri-cal (-rĭ-kȧl) } ter or chronometry ; measured by a chronometer. — chron'o-met'ri-cal-ly, adv.

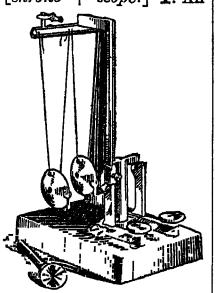
chro-nom'e-try (krō-nŏm'ĕ-trĭ), n. The art of measuring time; the measuring of time by periods or divisions.

chron'o-pher (krŏn'ō-fẽr), n. [chrono- + Gr. φέρειν to carry.] An instrument signaling the correct time to distant points by electricity.

chron'o-pho'to-graph (-fō'tō-grȧf), n. [chrono- + photograph.] One of a set of photographs of a moving object, taken for the purpose of recording and exhibiting successive phases of the motion.

chron'o-pho-tog'ra-phy (-fō-tŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. Art or process of making chronophotographs.

chron'o-scope (krŏn'ō-skōp), n. [chrono- + -scope.] 1. An instrument for measuring time, esp. one of various instruments of precision for measuring minute intervals of time, as in determining reaction time in psychophysical experiments, the velocity of projectiles, etc.



Vernier Chronoscope. One pendulum is released by the stimulus, the other by the reaction.

2. Specif. : A clock in which the time is shown by figures presented through holes in the dial. F. J. Britten.

chro-nos'co-py (krō-nŏs'kō-pĭ), n. [See CHRONOSCOPE.] The study of intervals of time, esp. of very brief intervals, by means of the chronoscope. — chron'o-scop'ic (krŏn'ō-skŏp'ĭk), a. — chron'o-scop'i-cal-ly (-ĭ-kȧl-ĭ), adv.

Chro'ŏ-coc-ca'ce-æ (krō'ŏ-kŏk-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. See CHROÖCOCCUS.] Bot. A family of unicellular blue-green algæ occurring either solitary or in colonies, in both fresh and salt water. They are among the lowest forms of plant life, the cells being usually without a distinct nucleus. They are colored partly by the phycocyanin dissolved in the cell sap. — chro'ŏ-coc-ca'ceous (-shŭs), a.

Chro'ŏ-coc'cus (-kŏk'ŭs), n. [NL. ; Gr. χρόα, χροιά, color + κόκκος a grain, seed.] Bot. A genus of algæ, type of the family Chroococcaceæ, having free cells without a gelatinous envelope. See CHROOCOCCACEÆ.

-chroous. [Gr. -χροος (as in χρυσόχροος), fr. χρώς, χροός, color.] An adjective suffix denoting colored.

chrys'a-lid (krĭs'ȧ-lĭd), a. Pert. to or like a chrysalis.

chrys'a-lid, n. A chrysalis.

Chry-sal'i-do-car'pus (krĭ-săl'ĭ-dō-kär'pŭs), n. [NL. See CHRYSALIS ; -CARPOUS.] Bot. A genus of pinnate-leaved palms consisting of the Madagascan C. lutescens, popular in cultivation under the name of Areca. See ARECA b.

chrys'a-lis (krĭs'ȧ-lĭs), n. ; pl. E. CHRYSALISES (-lĭs-ĕz; -lz), L. CHRYSALIDES (krĭ-săl'ĭ-dēz) [L. chrysallis the gold-colored pupa of butterflies, Gr. χρυσαλλίς, fr. χρυσός gold.] Zoöl. The pupa stage of insects (esp. of butterflies), which pass this stage in a quiescent and helpless condition, without taking food, being inclosed in a more or less firm integument. See PUPA.

chrys'a-loid (-loid), a. [chrysalis + -oid.] Like a chrysalis.

chrys-am'mic (krĭs-ăm'ĭk) }
chrys'am-min'ic (krĭs'ă-mĭn'ĭk) } a. [chryso- + Gr. ἄμμος sand.] Chem. Pertaining to or designating a golden-yellow acid of the formula $C_{14}H_4(NO_2)_4O_4$, a tetranitro derivative of chrysazin.

Chrys-am'pho-ra (-ăm'fō-rȧ), n. [NL. ; chryso- + amphora.] Bot. A genus of Californian sarraceniaceous plants. The only species, C. californica, is the sole West American representative of the pitcher plants. The leaves have a hood or crest surmounting the pitchers, with two long flaps resembling a fishtail. It is often cultivated.

chrys-an'i-line (-ăn'ĭ-lĭn; -lēn; 184), n. [chryso- + aniline.] Chem. A yellow crystalline compound, $C_{19}H_{15}N_3$, obtained as a by-product in the manufacture of rosaniline ; — called also phosphine. It is chiefly used in dyeing leather.

chrys'a-nis'ic (krĭs'ȧ-nĭs'ĭk), a. [chryso- + anisic ; — referring to its golden yellow crystals.] Chem. Pertaining to or designating an acid, $C_6H_2(NO_2)_2(NH_2)CO_2H$, obtained indirectly from anisic acid. Technically, it is 3, 5-dinitro-4-aminobenzoic acid. It is used in preparing some dyes.

chrys-an'the-mum (krĭs-ăn'thĕ-mŭm), n. [L., fr. Gr. χρυσάνθεμον ; χρυσός gold + ἄνθεμον flower.] 1. [cap.] Bot. A large genus of asteraceous perennial plants of very wide distribution in the Old World. It includes many different types, some ornamental in cultivation, others pernicious weeds, and still others of medicinal importance. In general the plants may be known by the smooth receptacle and involucre with several series of bracts. Most of the species have ray flowers. See DAISY, 2, FEVERFEW, INSECT POWDER.

2. A popular and very ornamental cultivated plant derived from several species of the above genus ; also, its large double flower heads of many shades of red, yellow, and white. The garden chrysanthemum has been formed by hybridization of C. indicum and C. morifolium, and has originated many varieties, differing in the shape of the rays, the degree of doubling of the heads, the color, etc.

3. See ORDER, 1.

Chry-sa'or (krĭ-sā'ôr ; krĭs'ȧ-ôr), n. [Gr. Χρυσάωρ, lit., with a golden sword.] 1. Gr. Myth. A son of Poseidon and Medusa, and husband of Callirrhoë, by whom he was the father of Geryon and Echidna.

2. In Spenser's "Faërie Queene," the sword of Artegal.

chrys'a-ro'bin (krĭs'ȧ-rō'bĭn), n. [Gr. χρυσός gold + E. araroba Goa powder + -in.] Chem. A bitter yellow compound, $C_{30}H_{26}O_7$, forming the essential constituent of Goa powder, and yielding chrysophanic acid on oxidation. It is used locally and internally in skin diseases, esp. psoriasis.

Chry-se'is (krĭ-sē'ĭs), n. [L., from Gr. Χρυσηίς.] In the Iliad, a beautiful maiden, daughter of Chryses, a priest of Apollo. She is captured by the Greeks and given as spoil to Agamemnon. His refusal of ransom from her father causes Apollo to send a pestilence upon the Greeks which ceases only when she is returned. Cf. BRISEIS.

chrys'el-e-phan'tine (krĭs'ĕl-ē-făn'tĭn), a. [chryso- + Gr. ἐλεφάντινος made of ivory, fr. ἔλεφας ivory, elephant.] Composed of, or adorned with, gold and ivory. The chryselephantine statues of the Greeks were built up with inferior materials, with ivory laid on for the flesh, and gold, decorated with color, for the hair and garments.

chry'sene (krĭ'sēn), n. [Gr. χρυσός gold.] Chem. A white crystalline substance, $C_{18}H_{12}$, with violet fluorescence. In an impure state, as obtained from coal tar, it is yellow. Its molecule is a union of four benzene nuclei.

chrys'o- (krĭs'ō-), chrys-. Combining forms from Greek χρυσός, gold.

Chrys'o-bal'a-nus (-băl'ȧ-nŭs), n. [NL. ; chryso- + balanus.] Bot. A small genus of tropical American and African amygdalaceous shrubs or trees having simple coriaceous leaves, white or greenish flowers with basal styles, and a pulpy drupe containing a ridged stone. C. oblongifolius is a trailing shrub of Florida. C. icaco is the coco plum.

chrys'o-ber'yl (krĭs'ō-bĕr'ĭl), n. [L. chrysoberyllus, Gr. χρυσοβήρυλλος ; χρυσός gold + βήρυλλος beryl.] Min. A mineral consisting of beryllium aluminate, $BeAl_2O_4$, with a small amount of iron, occurring in tabular orthorhombic crystals found as rolled pieces. It is commonly yellow or pale green (sometimes golden yellow, brown, etc.), and when transparent is used as a gem. Alexandrite and cat's-eye are varieties. H., 8.5. Sp. gr., 3.5–3.84.

chrys'o-bull' (-bŏl'), n. [LL. chrysobullum, LGr. χρυσόβουλλον : see CHRYSO-, BULL.] A golden bull, or seal.

chrys'o-chlore (-klōr), n. A mole of the genus Chrysochloris.

Chrysochloris (C. trevelyani) (½).

Chrys'o-chlo'ris (-klō'rĭs), n. [NL. ; chryso- + Gr. χλωρός light green.] Zoöl. A genus of moles confined to southern Africa, constituting a family Chrys'o-chlor'i-dæ (-klōr'ĭ-dē). The species, called golden moles, are remarkable for the iridescent hairs mingled with the fur.

chrys'o-chlo'rous (-klō'rŭs), a. [See CHRYSOCHLORIS.] Of a golden or yellowish green.

chrys'o-chrous (krĭs'ō-krŭs), a. [Gr. χρυσόχρους ; χρυσός gold + χρώς, χροός, color.] Golden yellow.

chrys'o-col'la (-kŏl'ȧ), n. [L., fr. Gr. χρυσόκολλα gold solder , χρυσός gold + κόλλα glue.] 1. Among the ancients, some mineral or minerals used in soldering gold, etc. The name may have included malachite, or the modern chrysocolla, or borax, to which last the name was in later times applied.

2. Min. A hydrous silicate of copper, $CuSiO_3{\cdot}2H_2O$, occurring massive, of a blue to green color and opal-like to earthy texture. H., 2-4. Sp. gr., 2.0–2.24.

chrys'o-gen (krĭs'ō-jĕn), n. [chryso- + -gen.] Chem A chron'o-gram'mic (-ĭk), a. = CHRONOGRAMMATIC.

Chro'non-ho'ton-thol'o-gos (krō'nŏn-hō'tŏn-thŏl'ō-gŏs), n. The hero of a burlesque tragedy of the same name produced by Henry Carey in 1734.

chron'o-ther-mom'e-ter, n. [chrono- + thermometer.] A timepiece so constructed as to intensify the effect of changes of temperature upon its rate, used to indicate mean temperature.

Chro-sper'ma (krō-spûr'mȧ), n. [NL. ; Gr. χρώς color + σπέρμα seed ; — in allusion to the colored seeds.] Bot. A genus of American melanthaceous plants consisting of a single species, C. muscætoxicum. See FLY POISON chrys-. See CHRYSO-. [AL.

Chry'sal (krĭs'ăl). Var. of CHRYSALIS.

Chry'sale' (krĕ'zȧl'), n. In Molière's "Les Femmes Savantes," Philaminte's plain henpecked husband.

chrys-an'the-mine (krĭs-ăn'thĕ-mĭn ; -mēn), n. Chem A delinquescent alkaloid, $C_{14}H_{28}O_2N_2$, found in blossoms of Chrysanthemum cinerariæfolium.

chrys'a-zin (krĭs'ȧ-zĭn), n. [Abbr. fr. chrysammic + alizarin.] Chem. A golden or reddish brown compound isomeric with alizarin. See CHRYSAZOL.

chrys'a-zol (-zōl ; -zŏl), n. Org. Chem. A yellow crystalline compound, $C_{14}H_6(OH)_2$, derived from anthracene and yielding chrysazin by oxidation.

Chrys'e-mys (krĭs'ĕ-mĭs), n. [NL. ; chryso- + Gr. ἐμύς the fresh-water tortoise.] Zool. A genus of American more or less highly colored fresh-water turtles or terrapins, including the painted turtle (which see).

chry-sen'ic (krĭ-sĕn'ĭk), a. Chem. Designating a monobasic acid, $C_{17}H_{11}CO_2H$, obtained by oxidizing chrysene.

chryso-aid'i-dæ (-ăid'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL., fr. Gr. χρυσίς a vessel of gold, a gold-broidered dress] Zool. See CUCKOO FLY.

chrys'in (krĭs'ĭn), n. [chryso- + -in.] Org. Chem. A bright yellow solid, $C_{15}H_{10}O_4$, found in the buds of species of Populus.

chrys'o-car'pous (krĭs'ō-kär'pŭs), a. [Gr. χρυσόκαρπος ; χρυσός gold + καρπός fruit.] Bot. Yellow-fruited.

chrys-oc'ra-cy (krĭs-ŏk'rȧ-sĭ), n. [chryso- + -cracy.] Rule of gold ; plutocracy. Nonce Word.

chrys-og'ra-phy (krĭs-ŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n.; pl. -PHIES (-fĭz). [Gr. χρυσογραφία; χρυσός gold + γράφειν to write.] 1. Art of writing in letters of gold.

2. A writing executed in letters of gold.

chrys'o-lite (krĭs'ō-līt), n. [ME. crisolite, OF. crisolite, F. chrysolithe, L. chrysolithos, Gr. χρυσόλιθος; χρυσός gold + λίθος stone.] Min. A magnesium iron silicate, $(Mg{\cdot}Fe)_2SiO_4$, usually olive-green, occurring in orthorhombic crystals, in masses and in grains, and common in certain igneous and metamorphic rocks; — called also olivine and peridot. Transparent varieties are used as gems. H., 6.5–7. Sp. gr., 3 27–3.57. Also, formerly, any of several yellow or greenish gems. — chrys'o-lit'ic (-lĭt'ĭk), a.

At present it is customary to call those which incline most to yellow chrysolite; the yellowish green, resembling a light tourmaline with a dash of yellow, is known by the name peridot, given to it by the French jewelers, and olivine is the name associated with the brighter yellowish emerald-green variety, although originally the yellow to olive-green stones were known by that name. W. R. Cattelle.

chrysolite group. Min. A group of orthorhombic orthosilicates of which chrysolite is the type.

Chrys'o-mel'i-dæ (-mĕl'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.; cf. Gr χρυσομηλολόνθιον a little golden beetle, χρυσός gold + μηλολόνθιον beetle.] Zoöl. A very extensive family of small beetles that feed chiefly on the leaves of plants, both as larvæ and adults; the leaf beetles. They are variously shaped (often short and rounded) with moderately long antennæ and often brilliant metallic colors. The potato bug and tortoise beetles are examples.—chrys'o-mel'id (-ĭd), a.&n.

Chrys-o'pa (krĭs-ō'pȧ), n. [NL.; chryso- + Gr. ὤψ, ὠπός, eye, face.] Zool. A genus of lacewing flies. Most of the species are pale green in color, with eyes having a golden luster, and hence are called golden-eyed flies, or, from their disagreeable odor, stink flies. Their larvæ are carnivorous and are called aphis lions (which see) The genus is made the type of a family, Chrys-op'i-dæ (-ŏp'ĭ-dē), or is included in the Hemerobiidæ. See LACEWING.

chrys'o-phane (krĭs'ō-fān), n. [chryso- + Gr. φαινειν to show.] Chem. A glucoside extracted from rhubarb as a bitter, yellow, crystalline powder, and yielding chrysophanic acid on decomposition.

chrys'o-phan'ic (-făn'ĭk), a. - Org. Chem. Pertaining to or designating a golden-yellow crystalline acid, $C_{15}H_{10}O_4$, obtained from rhubarb, a yellow lichen (Parmelia parietina), and elsewhere; — called also rhein, etc. It is a dihydroxy derivative of methyl anthraquinone.

chrys'o-phyll (krĭs'ō-fĭl), n. [chryso- + -phyll.] Bot. A yellow coloring matter, in plants, probably a decomposition product of chlorophyll. Cf. XANTHOPHYLL.

Chrys'o-phyl'lum (-fĭl'ŭm), n. [NL.] Bot. A large genus of tropical American sapotaceous trees, many having lustrous bronze or yellow foliage. They have small pentamerous flowers without staminodia, and a 1-seeded, pulpy berry. C. cainito is the star apple of the West Indies.

chrys'o-type (krĭs'ō-tīp), n. [chryso- + -type.] Photog. A picture taken upon paper prepared by the use of a sensitive salt of iron and developed by the application of chloride of gold; also, the process, invented by Sir J. Herschel.

chthon'ic-an (thŏn'ĭk-ăn), a. [Also cap.] [Gr. χθόνιος in or under the earth, fr. χθών, χθονός, earth.] Designating, or pertaining to, gods or spirits of the underworld; esp., relating to the underworld gods of the Greeks, whose worship is widely considered as more primitive in form than that of the Olympian gods. The characteristics of chthonian worship are propitiatory and magical rites and generalized or euphemistic names of the deities, which are supposed to have been primarily ghosts. The classical mysteries developed from this worship.

Isocrates states very clearly that the Olympians (as the Romans said, the Superi) give good things, whereas the Chthonian deities (or the Inferi) have to do with punishments and calamities, and that their worship consists not so much in honorable sacrifice as in ceremonies of riddance When victims were offered to them, they were usually black instead of white, and the service was often performed at dead of night amid the most gloomy associations. H. Browne.

The worship of the dead, i. e. of the heroes, and of the Chthonian gods, was marked off by broad lines from that of the Olympian gods; and most of what was really deep and heartfelt religion in Greece belongs to the former, while most of what is artistic and a permanent possession for the civilized world belongs to the latter. Dict. of Bible (Hastings) chub (chŭb), n. [This word, of unknown origin, seems to signify a large or thick fish. Cf. E. dial. chub a log of wood, Sw. kubb.] 1. A common European fresh-water cyprinoid fish (Leuciscus cephalus), little valued as food; the cheven. chuck, n. 1. [Cf. CHOCK a wedge.] A log or lump; a chock, a chunk. Dial. Eng.

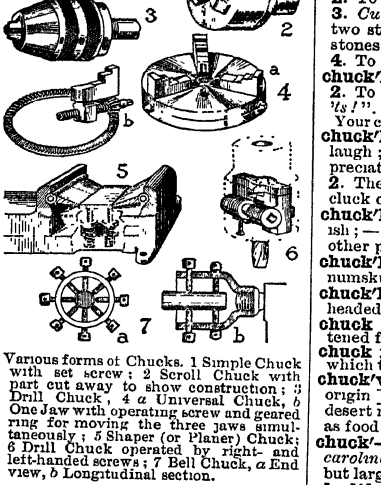
2. A portion of a side of dressed beef, including most of the neck, the parts about the shoulder blade, and those about the first three ribs.

3. A chock, as for supporting a boat; esp., Founding, a taper piece of wood used to stiffen the bars of a flask or connect them with parts below the joint.

4. Mach. Any of various contrivances for holding work or a tool in a machine, esp. in a lathe. Vise chucks, for planers, shapers, etc., are forms of the parallel vise and are often adapted for taper work and for swiveling on a center. The monitor chuck consists of a circular faceplate fastened to the machine table by an angle plate on which the faceplate is pivoted so that the work can be presented to the tool at any desired angle. Lathe chucks are devices for holding work directly to the live spindle without the use of centers, and consist essentially, in most forms, of two, three, or four jaws or dogs moved independently, as in the independent chuck, or simultaneously, as in the universal chuck, or either independently or simultaneously at will, as in the combination chuck. A simple form of lathe chuck consists merely of a hollow stem for receiving the work, with a set screw for securing it. The bell chuck is a bell-shaped device in which the work is held and adjusted by one or more sets of screws. The box chuck, used by brass finishers, resembles a parallel vise and is useful in turning small flanged articles. Drill chucks, for holding drills or small work, are either simple hollow spindles or are special forms of the universal chuck. A simple lathe mandrel for holding hollow work is sometimes called an arbor chuck, and a chuck consisting essentially of a flat ring, with set screws in its rim for holding the work, is called a shell chuck. The spur, or prong, chuck, used for driving the work in a wood-turning lathe, is used in conjunction with a fixed center and usually consists of a stubby three-pronged fork, forced into the work. The scroll chuck is a common form of universal chuck having jaws moved by a metal scroll which gears with slots or threads in the jaws. The cement chuck is a faceplate for a wood-turning lathe, on which the work is cemented by a composition of resin and wax. Eccentric chucks are special devices for turning noncircular work, for engine turning, etc., and elliptic or oval chucks for elliptic or oval work. The center chuck is not a true chuck, but is merely a plate containing the live center and usually also a dog for driving the work. The geometric chuck is a device used in a rose engine for producing the ornamental figures of engine turning. The branch chuck is a form of chuck having four projections, each provided with a set screw.



Various forms of Chucks. 1 Simple Chuck with set screw; 2 Scroll Chuck with part cut away to show construction; 3 Drill Chuck, 4 a Universal Chuck, b One Jaw with operating screw and geared ring for moving the three jaws simultaneously; 5 Shaper (or Planer) Chuck; 6 Drill Chuck operated by right- and left-handed screws; 7 Bell Chuck, a End view, b Longitudinal section.

KIRK.] 1. A building set apart for public Christian worship. In the United States the term church is in general use by all denominations for their places of worship, though other names, as temple, tabernacle, are sometimes used in special cases or for special buildings. In England church has been restricted in use to the places of worship of the Established Church, and chapel or meetinghouse used for those of all other bodies; but church is now sometimes more widely used, as for the places of worship of the Roman Catholics and of some Nonconformists. In Scotland church is chiefly applied to places of worship of the Established Church (Presbyterian) and of the bodies which have separated from it. In the British colonies the term is more or less extended as in the United States.

2. A place of worship of any religion, as a Jewish or heathen temple or a mosque. Obs. Acts XIX. 37.

3. The collective body of Christians; all who are in spiritual union with Christ, acknowledging him as their head; — often, as a spiritual society separated from the world, opposed to the world.

ci-gar' (sĭ-gar'), n. [Sp. cigarro, perh. named fr. a resemblance to the shape of the cigarra cicada. cf. F. cigare.] A small roll of tobacco, used for smoking. The cigar is made by binding a number of short or long pieces of leaf (short or long filler) together and covering them with a finer piece of leaf, stripped of stalks, called the wrapper. The ends are usually tapered. By act of July 24, 1897, c. 11, sec. 10, of the Revised Statutes of the United States it is provided "that all rolls of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, wrapped with tobacco, shall be classed as cigars, and all rolls of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, wrapped in paper, or any substance other than tobacco, shall be classed as cigarettes." Under this ruling the so-called "all-tobacco cigarettes" are now designated as "cigars."

cig'a-rette' (sĭg'ă-rĕt'), n [F. cigarette.] Lit., a little cigar; a little roll of finely cut tobacco, inclosed usually in paper, sometimes in tobacco leaf or corn husk, used for smoking; also, one of powdered cubebs, medicinal leaves, or various other substances inclosed in paper. See CIGAR.

Cigarette Beetle (Lasioderma serricorne). × 4.

cigar fish. A small carangoid fish (Decapterus punctatus) of the West Indies, Florida, etc.; — so called from its fusiform shape.

cigar plant. A Mexican lythraceous plant (Cuphea ignea) often cultivated for its flowers, the tubular red and black calyx of which suggests a cigar. It is sold usually under the name of Cuphea platycentra.

cil'er-y, cil'ler-y (sĭl'ẽr-ĭ), n.; pl. -ERIES (-Iz). Arch. The carved foliage, etc., ornamenting the head of a column; a volute.

cil'i-a (sĭl'ĭ-ă), n. pl.; sing. CILIUM (-ŭm). [L. cilium eyelid.] 1. Anat. The eyelashes.

2. Biol. Hairlike processes, found on many cells, capable of a vibratory or lashing movement. A cell may bear one cilium or many (see FLAGELLUM). Unlike pseudopodia, cilia are permanent processes, and in many cases keep in incessant motion, delivering their strokes more forcibly in one direction than the other. In free-swimming unicellular organisms, as many infusorians, zoöspores, spermatozoids, etc, and in some small multicellular forms, as the embryos of many mollusks and worms, cilia serve as organs of locomotion. In the higher animals their usual function is to produce a current of fluid. In man ciliated cells occur in several places. They line the nasal cavity, trachea, bronchi, etc., and by a constant propulsion toward the nose assist the removal of mucus and dust particles.

3 Bot. Any minute marginal hairs or hairlike processes forming a fringe like an eyelash, as the cilia which constitute the peristome in mosses.

4. Zoöl. The barbicels of a feather.

cil'i-a-ry (sĭl'ĭ-ă-rĭ), a. [Cf. F. ciliaire.] Anat. & Biol. a Of or pertaining to cilia. b Pertaining to or designating certain structures of the eyeball (see below).

ciliary body, an annular structure on the inner surface of the anterior wall of the eyeball, composed largely of the ciliary muscle and bearing the ciliary processes. — c. flame, Zoöl., one of the vibrating flagella or bundles of cilia of the excretory organs of flatworms. See FLAME CELL. — c. ganglion, a small ganglion of the ophthalmic nerve, situated in the orbit and supplying nerves to parts of the eyeball. — c. muscle, an annular muscle composed of nonstriated fibers situated in the ciliary body, the chief agent in accommodation. — c. nerves, Anat., minute nerves supplying the ciliary muscle, iris, etc. The short ciliary nerves arise from the ciliary ganglion, the long ciliary nerves from the nasal nerve. — c. processes, vascular folds on the surface of the ciliary body, giving attachment to the suspensory ligament of the lens.

Cil'i-a'ta (-ā'tă), n. pl. [NL. See CILIA.] Zoöl. An order of Infusoria having cilia both when young and adult. In some species the cilia cover the body generally, in others they form a band around the mouth. It includes both fixed and free-swimming forms. Vorticella, Stentor, and Paramecium (see these terms) are familiar examples.

cil'i-ate (sĭl'ĭ-āt) } a. Bot. & Zool. Provided with cilia; as, cil'i-at'ed (-āt'ĕd) } a ciliate leaf; ciliated epithelium; ciliate infusorians (those of the group Ciliata).

cil'i-a'tion (-ā'shŭn), n. State or quality of being ciliate; also, a ciliate process.

cil'ice (sĭl'ĭs), n. [F. See CILICIOUS.] Haircloth; a kind of haircloth undergarment; a hair shirt.

Ci-lil'cian (sĭ-lĭlsh'ăn), a. Of or pertaining to Cilicia, an ancient country in southeastern Asia Minor. — n. A native or inhabitant of Cilicia.

cil-lo'sis (sĭ-lō'sĭs), n. [NL., fr. L. cilium eyelid.] Med. A spasmodic trembling of the upper eyelid.

Cim'bri (sĭm'brī), n. pl. [L.; cf. Gr. Κίμβροι.] A people encountered by the Romans in Styria about 113 B. C. At first victorious over the Romans, they were destroyed by Marius, 101 B. C. cinder cone. Geol. A volcanic cone composed of cinders.

Cin'cle-na'les (-nā'lēz), n. pl [NL. See CINCHONA.] Bot. In Lindley's classification, an alliance comprising the madder family, etc.—cin'cho-nal (-năl), a.
cin-cho'ni-a (sĭn-kō'nĭ-a), n. [NL.] Chem. Cinchonine. cin'cho-nin'ic (sĭn'kō-nĭn'ĭk), a. Chem. See CINCHONIC ACID a. cin'cho-tan'nic (-tăn'ĭk), a. [cinchona + tannic.] Designating a brownish red, soluble acid, $C_{14}H_{16}O_{9}$, found in cinchona bark. It is a glucoside.
cin'cho-tox'ine (-tŏk'sĭn; -sēn), n. Also -in. [cinchona + toxine.] Chem. Cinchonicine.
cin'cho-va'tine (-vă'tĭn; -tēn), n. Also -tin. [F., fr. NL. Cinchona ovata a species of cinchona.] = ARICINE.
Cin'cin-na'ti (sĭn'sĭ-n*ă*'tĭ), n. pl. See Order of the Cincinnati, under ORDER.
Cincinnati anticline or arch. Geol. A low broad arch developed in Ohio, Kentucky, and Indiana after the close of the Ordovician period.
Cin'cli-dæ (sĭn'klĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. See CINCLUS. cin'clis (sĭn'klĭs), n.; pl. CINCLIDES (-klĭ-dēz). [NL., fr. Gr. κιγκλίς a latticed gate.] Zool. One of the pores through which the acontia of sea anemones are protruded.
Cin'clus (-klŭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr κίγκλος a kind of bird.] Zool The genus consisting of the water ousels—sometimes placed in the thrush family or made a separate family, Cinclidæ.
cinder frame. A framework of wire in front of the tubes of a locomotive, to arrest the escape of cinders. [CINDERY, L.]
cin'der-ous (sĭn'dĕr-ŭs), a. = Ci-ne'ans (sĭ-nē'ănz). D. Bib.
cin'e-mat'ic (sĭn'ē-măt'ĭk), cin'e-mat'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), etc Vars. of KINEMATIC, etc.
ci'ne-mom'e-ter (sĭ'nē-mŏm'ē-tĕr; sĭn'ē-), n. Var. of KINEMOMETER.
ci-nen'chy-ma (sĭ-nĕŋ'kĭ-mă), n. [NL.; Gr. κινεῖν to move + -enchyma.] Bot. Laticiferous tissue.—cin'en-chym'a-tous (sĭn'-ĕn-kĭm'a-tŭs; -kĭ'mă-tŭs), a.
cin'e-neg'a-tive (sĭn'ē-nĕg'ă-tĭv), n. [Gr. κινεῖν to move + negative.] A continuous film of photomicrograph negatives taken in a cinematograph.
cin'er-a'ceous (sĭn'ĕr-ā'shŭs), a. [L. cineraceus, fr. cinis ashes.] Like ashes; cinereous.
cin'er-a'tion (-ā'shŭn), n. Cf. F cinération.] Incineration.
cin'er-a'tor (sĭn'ĕr-ā'tĕr), n. A crematory furnace; a crematory.
ci-nè're-a (sĭ-nē'rē-a), n [NL. See CINEREOUS.] Anat. The gray matter of nerve tissue.—ci-ne're-al (-ăl), a. [& R.
ci-ne're-al, a. l. Cinerary. Obs
2. Ash-colored; cinereous.
3. Of, pert. to, or producing, ash; as, the cinereal (inorganic) constituents of a plant.
ci-ne're-al, n. A cinereal substance, as a manure cin'er-es'cent (sĭn'ĕr-ĕs'ĕnt), a. [L. cinerescens, p. pr., turning to ashes.] Somewhat cinereous.
ci-ner'u-lent (sĭ-nĕr'ū-lĕnt), a. Full of ashes. Rare.
ci-ne'si-ol'o-gy (sĭ-nē'sĭ-ŏl'ō-jĭ), ci-ne'sis (sĭ-nē'sĭs), etc. Vars. of KINESIOLOGY, KINESIS, etc.
ci-ne'to-scop'ic (sĭ-nē'tō-skŏp'ĭk), a. Var. of KINETOSCOPIC.
Cin'ga-lese' (sĭn'gă-lēz' ; -lēs'). Var. of SINGHALESE.

Cin'der-el'la (sĭn'dĕr-ĕl'a), n. [Dim. from cinder, in imitation of F. Cendrillon, cendres ashes; cf. 2 Blackened or soiled with cinders.

cin'e-fac'tion (sĭn'ē-făk'shŭn), n. [LL. cinefactio. L. cinis ashes + facere to make.] Cineration; reduction to ashes; also, a cindered thing. Rare.

cin'e-mat'o-graph (-măt'ō-grăf), n. [Gr. κίνημα, κινήματος, motion + -graph.] 1. A machine, combining magic lantern and kinetoscope features, for projecting on a screen a series of pictures, moved rapidly (25 to 50 a second) and intermittently before an objective lens, and producing by persistence of vision the illusion of continuous motion, a moving-picture machine; also, any of several other machines or devices producing moving pictorial effects. Other common names for the cinematograph are animatograph, biograph, bioscope, electrograph, electroscope, kinematograph, kinetoscope, veriscope, vitagraph, vitascope, zoogyroscope, zoopraxiscope, etc. Cf. KINETOSCOPE, 2, TACHYSCOPE, ZOETROPE.
The cinematograph, invented by Edison in 1894, is the result of the introduction of the flexible film into photography in place of glass. Encyc. Brit
2. A camera for taking chronophotographs for exhibition by the instrument described above.

ci-ne'mo-graph (sĭ-nē'mō-grăf), n. [Gr. κίνημα motion + -graph.] An integrating anemometer.

ci-nene' (sĭ-nēn'), n. [From CINEOL.] Chem. Inactive limonene. See LIMONENE

cin'e-o-graph' (sĭn'ē-ō-grăf'), n. [Gr. κινεῖν to move + -graph.] A picture as projected on a screen by a cinematograph, representing objects in motion; a moving picture.

cin'e-ol (sĭn'ē-ŏl; -ōl), n. [From NL. oleum cinae, by transposition. See 2d -OL.] Org. Chem. A liquid, $C_{10}H_{18}O$, of camphorlike odor, contained in many essential oils, esp. oil of wormwood (oleum cinæ), oil of eucalyptus, and oil of cajeput. It is closely related to terpin. By oxidation it yields cin'e-ol'ic ac'id (-ōl'ĭk; -ō'lĭk), $C_{10}H_{16}O_5$.

Cin'e-ra'ri-a (sĭn'ē-rā'rĭ-a), n. [NL., fr. L. cinerarius pert. to ashes, fr. cinis ashes;—from the ash-colored down on the leaves.] 1. Bot. A genus of South African asteraceous herbs or undershrubs rather closely allied to Senecio.
2. [l. c.] Hort. A handsome pot plant (Senecio cruentus), having ample heart-shaped leaves and large clusters of flower heads with white, red, or purple rays, the colors often variegated. There are many varieties.

cin'e-ra'ri-um (-ŭm), n.; pl. -RIA (-ă). [L.] A place to receive the ashes of the cremated dead.

cin'er-a-ry (sĭn'ĕr-ă-rĭ), a. [L. cinerarius, fr. cinis ashes.] Pertaining to, containing, or used for, ashes, esp. those of the cremated dead, as, a cinerary urn.

ci-ne're-ous (sĭ-nē'rē-ŭs), a. [L. cinereus, fr. cinis ashes.] Like ashes; ash-colored; ashen.

cin'er-i'tious (sĭn'ĕr-ĭsh'ŭs), a [L. cineritius, cinericius, fr. cinis ashes.] 1. Ash-colored; gray; cinereous.
2. Of the nature of ashes.

1. A girdle, as of a priest's alb. Rare.
2. Zoöl. & Anat. A band or girdle, or structure likened to a girdle; as: a A band of color or raised spiral line, as on certain univalve shells. b The clitellum of annelids. c A ridge about the base of the crown of a tooth. d A tract of nerve fibers running in the substance of, and connecting the callosal and hippocampal convolutions of, the brain. e The outer zone of cilia on the disk of certain rotifers.

cin'na-bar (sĭn'ă-băr), n. [ME. cynoper, OF. cenobre, F. cinabre, L. cinnabaris, Gr. κιννάβαρι; prob. of Oriental origin; cf. Per. qinbār, Hind. shangarf.] 1. Min. Mercuric sulphide, HgS, occurring in brilliant red crystals, and also in red or brownish masses. It is the only important ore of mercury. H, 2–2.5. Sp. gr., 8.0–8.2.
2. Artificial red mercuric sulphide, used principally as a pigment; vermilion. It was formerly an official remedy both in Great Britain and the United States.
3. A red color like vermilion pigment; vermilion. Obs.

cin'na-bar-ine (sĭn'ă-bă-rĭn; -rĭn), a. Pertaining to, like, consisting of, or containing, cinnabar; as, cinnabarine sand.

cin'na-mate (-māt), n. A salt or ester of cinnamic acid.

cin-nam'ic (sĭ-năm'ĭk; sĭn'ă-mĭk), a. [From CINNAMON.] Chem. Pertaining to, or obtained from, cinnamon.
cinnamic acid, a white crystalline odorless substance, C_6H_5-C_2H_2-CO_2H, found in oil of cinnamon, storax, balsam of Peru, etc. It is now made extensively from certain benzene derivatives and used for the artificial production of indigo.—c. alcohol. See STYRONE.—c. aldehyde, a colorless aromatic oil, C_8H_7·CHO, the chief constituent of oil of cinnamon Cin'na-mo'mum (sĭn'ă-mō'mŭm), n. [L., cinnamon.] Bot. A large genus of lauraceous trees and shrubs, natives of tropical and subtropical Asia and Australia. They have coriaceous 3–6-veined leaves and small apetalous flowers with a 6-cleft calyx and 9 stamens in three rows. Several species are of great economic importance. The genus is also represented by fossil remains, indicating a former wide distribution. See CINNAMON, CAMPHOR, CASSIA BARK.

cin'na-mon (sĭn'ă-mŭn), n. [F. cinnamome, L. cinnamum, Gr. κιννάμωμον, κίνναμον; of Semitic origin; cf. Heb. qinnāmōn.] 1. The highly aromatic bark of any of several lauraceous trees of the genus Cinnamomum, esp. the Ceylonese C. zeylanicum. It is one of the best cordial, carminative, and astringent spices, and is much used in cookery for flavoring. It yields a colorless aromatic oil, oil of cinnamon, consisting essentially of cinnamic aldehyde.

Cinnamon (Cinnamomum zeylanicum) Leaves and Flowers. (⅓)

2. Any tree that yields cinnamon. See CINNAMOMUM.

cinnamon bear. A dark chestnut-colored variety (Ursus americanus) of black bear.

cinnamon fern. A large North American fern (Osmunda cinnamomea), having rich cinnamon-colored spore-bearing fronds produced separately from the green foliage fronds.

cin'na-mon'ic (-nŏn'ĭk), a. Of or like cinnamon; specif., Chem., cinnamic.

cin'na-mon-root' (-năn-rōōt'), n. A European asteraceous aromatic herb (Inula squarrosa) with rough leaves and corymbose flower heads;—called also plowman's spikenard.

cinnamon rose. A European rose (Rosa cinnamomea) with slender, half climbing stems and solitary double purple flowers, having a rich fragrance.

cinnamon stone. Min. A variety of garnet sometimes used in jewelry. See GARNET.

cinnamon vine. The Chinese yam or Chinese potato (Dioscorea divaricata), commonly cultivated as an ornamental climber for its glossy heart-shaped leaves, and in the tropics for its edible tubers.

cin'na-myl (sĭn'ă-mĭl), n. [cinnamic + -yl.] Chem. a The radical, $C_6H_5CH.CHCO$, of cinnamic compounds. Cf. BENZOYL. b = STYRYL.

cin'no-line (-ō-lĭn; -lēn: 184), n. Also -lin. [cinnamic + quinoline.] Chem. A poisonous crystalline base, $C_8H_6N_2$, from certain diazo compounds. It is an orthodiazine.

cinque (sĭŋk), n. [F. cinq, fr. L. quinque five. See FIVE.]
1. Five; the number five in dice or cards.
2. pl. See under CHANGE RINGING.

cir'cle (sûr'k'l), n. [ME. cercle, F. cercle, fr. L circulus, dim. of circus circle, akin to Gr. κρίκος, κίρκος, circle, ring. Cf CIRCUS, CIRCUM-.] 1. A closed plane curve exactly alike throughout, all of its points being equidistant from a point within called the center ; a ring ; a circumference.
2. The plane surface bounded by such a curve.
3. Of a heavenly body : a Formerly, the sphere ; now, the orbit ; also, the period of revolution. b The sphere or orb.
It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth. Is. xl. 22.
4. A halo, as around the moon.
5. Something having in general a circular form ; as : a A ring or circlet. b A crown ; diadem ; coronet. c A circus ring. d A group of tiers of seats in a theater ; as, the dress circle. e Archæol. A group of stones in a ring, as at Stonehenge. f Weaving. A flat piece sometimes used as a substitute for a swivel shuttle in hand and power looms. g Astron. An instrument of observation, the graduated limb of which consists of an entire circle. When it is mounted on a heavy pier or wall in an observatory, it is called a mural circle ; when mounted with a telescope on an axis and turning in Y's, in the plane of the meridian, a meridian, or transit, circle ; when involving the principle of reflection, like the sextant, a reflecting circle ; and when that of repeating an angle several times continuously around the graduated limb, a repeating circle.
6. Compass ; circuit.
In the circle of this forest. Shak.
7. A series ending where it begins, and repeating itself.
Thus in a circle runs the peasant's pain. Dryden.
8. A set or series of parts connected to form a whole ; a system ; cycle ; round ; as, a circle of pleasures, of sciences.

Circle. AB Diameter ; C Center ; CD, CA, CB Radii ; EKF Arc on Chord EF ; ELFK (area) Segment on Chord EF ; ACD (area) Sector ; GH Secant ; TPM Tangent at point P ; EKFBPDA Circumference.

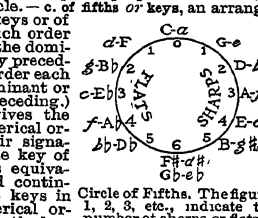
9. Logic. A form of reasoning in which the conclusion is, in some form, found to be unwarrantably assumed in the grounds or hypotheses from which the reasoning proceeds.
That heavy bodies descend by gravity ; and, again, that gravity is a quality whereby a heavy body descends, is an impertinent circle and teaches nothing. Glanvill.
10. A circular group of persons ; a ring.
11. A company assembled, or conceived to assemble, about a central point of interest, or bound by a common tie, a class or division of society ; a coterie ; a set.
As his name gradually became known, the circle of his acquaintance widened. Macaulay.
12. A territorial division or district ; specif. : a In the Holy Roman Empire, any of the ten principalities or provinces which had seats in the Diet. Obs. b [G. kreis.] In modern Germany, a division for local government, corresponding in general to the English county. c [It. circondario.] In Italy, a subdivision of the province. d In India, a district for the issue of government paper currency.
13. Circuit of action or influence ; realm. Cf. SPHERE, 5.
14. Indirect form of words ; circumlocution. Obs.
Syn. — Ring, circlet, compass, circuit, inclosure.
circle at infinity, an imaginary circle at infinity, the common intersection of all spheres in ordinary space. — c. of altitude, Astron., an almucantar. — c. of convergence of a series, Math., in the plane of complex number, a circle that bounds the region of convergency of the series ; as, the circle of convergence of the logarithmic series is the unit circle about the origin. — c. of curvature, the osculating circle or any equal circle. — c. of declination, Astron., any great circle of the celestial sphere perpendicular to the equator ; an hour circle. — c. of fifths or keys, an arrangement of the musical keys or of their signatures in such order that each keynote is the dominant or fifth of the key preceding. (In the reverse order each keynote is the subdominant or fourth of the key preceding.) Starting at C, this gives the sharp keys in the numerical order of sharps in their signatures. By reading the key of F♯ (six sharps) as its equivalent G♭ (six flats), and continuing, it gives the flat keys in the diminishing numerical order of the flats back to the key of C. The order is thus C, G, D, A, E, B, F♯ or G♭, D♭, A♭, E♭, B♭, F, C. — c. of illumination, Astron., the great circle of a planet or satellite that forms the boundary between the illuminated and unilluminated hemispheres. — c. of keys. = CIRCLE OF FIFTHS. — c. of latitude. a Astron. Any great circle perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptic. b A meridian of the terrestrial sphere along which latitude is measured ; also, sometimes, a parallel of latitude. c Spherical Projection. A small circle of the sphere, whose plane is perpendicular to the axis. — c. of longitude. a Any lesser circle of the celestial sphere parallel to the ecliptic. b A parallel of latitude in the terrestrial sphere. — c. of perpetual apparition, Astron., at any place, that circle around the visible celestial pole the stars in which never set. This circle is a parallel of declination tangent to the horizon, and its radius equals the latitude of the place. — c. of perpetual occultation, Astron., at any given place, that circle around the depressed celestial pole the stars within which never rise. — c. of position, in Sumner's method of finding the longitude at sea, a small circle of the globe, whose center (called the subsolar point) is directly underneath the sun, and whose diameter is equal to the sun's observed zenith distance. The ship is always located at one of the intersecting points of two consecutive circles of position. — c. of right ascension, Astron., a great circle passing through the celestial poles. — c. of the gorge, Math., a minimum circle on a surface of revolution, cut out by a plane perpendicular to the axis. — c. of the sphere, a circle upon the surface of the sphere, specifically of the earth or of the heavens, called a great circle when its plane passes through the center of the sphere ; in all other cases, a small circle. — c. of Willis (wĭl'ĭs), Anat., a complete circle or ring of arteries formed by the anastomosing branches of the carotid and basilar arteries at the base of the brain ; — so named from the English anatomist Thomas Willis (d. 1675). Its purpose is to equalize the blood pressure and to prevent interruption of the blood supply to the brain if one or more vessels should become obstructed.



Circle of Fifths. The figures 1, 2, 3, etc., indicate the number of sharps or flats in the Major Keys, G, D, A, etc., and in their relative Minor Keys, e, b, f ♯, etc.

cir'cle, v. i. To move in a circle ; to form, or extend in, a circle ; to circulate.

2. Marked with a circle or circles. Pope.
3. Having the form of a circle ; round ; circular.

circle geometry. Geometry in which the circle is taken as the element, or primary constituent, in which therefore the plane is 3-dimensional and space 6-dimensional.

circle reading. The reading of a graduated circle in a mathematical instrument, generally the mean result obtained from several such readings.

cir'clet (sûr'klĕt), n. 1. A little circle ; esp., an ornament for the person having the form of a circle ; that which encircles, as a ring, a bracelet, or a headband.
Her fair locks in rich circlet be enrolled Spenser.
Fairest of stars . . . that crown'st the smiling morn
With thy bright circlet. Milton.
2. In general, a round band, a ring, or small hoop. Pope.

cir'clet, v. t. & i. ; CIR'CLET-ED ; CIR'CLET-ING. To move in circlets over ; to form circlets. Rare.

cir'cuit (sûr'kĭt), n. [F. circuit, fr. L. circuitus, fr. cir- cuire or circumire to go around; circum around + ire to go.] 1. The circumference of, or distance round, any space or area; the boundary line round an area; compass.

The circuit or compass of Ireland is 1,800 miles Stow.

2. That which encircles anything, as a crown; circlet. Obs.

The golden circuit on my head. Shak.

3. The space inclosed within a circle, or within limits.

A circuit wide inclosed with goodliest trees. Milton.

4. Act of moving, going, or revolving round, as in a circle or orbit, or of traversing a given course round an area of whatever shape, as a baseball diamond; a round; circuitous route or journey; detour; revolution; as, the periodical circuit of the earth round the sun.

5. A regular or appointed journeying from place to place in the pursuit of one's calling, as of a judge, or a preacher.

6. Those making the circuit, as the judges.

7. A route over, or district through, which one periodically journeys from place to place, as in the pursuit of his calling; specif.: a A judicial district established by law for a judge or judges to visit for the administration of justice. b Methodist Church. A district in which an itinerant preacher labored. c The order or course of a series of harness races held at various associated tracks according to a more or less permanent schedule. The series of most important meets constitutes the grand circuit.

8. a In electricity, the complete path of an electric current, including, usually, the generating device; also, by extension, any portion of such a path. The complete path is often spoken of as a closed circuit; when its continuity is broken, so that a current is no longer able to pass, the circuit is said to be an open, or broken, circuit. b In magnetism, a path of magnetic flux. Like the electric circuit, it is spoken of as open or closed.

9 Math. Any closed curve on a surface.

10. Circumlocution, as of reasoning. Obs. "Thou hast used no circuit of words" Huloet.

circuit of action. = CIRCUITY OF ACTION.

cir'cuit (sûr'kĭt), v. t. & i.; CIR'CUIT-ED; CIR'CUIT-ING. To go, travel, or move around; to make the circuit of; to compass; circulate. "Having circuited the air." T. Warton.

cir'cuit-al (-kĭl), a. Of or relating to circuits, or consisting in a circuit.

circuit binding. A style of binding for books having flexible projections of the covers, called circuit edges, that fold and meet so as to close in the edges of the book.

circuit breaker. Elec. An automatic device for breaking a circuit at the highest current which it may be called upon to carry.

circuit court. Law. A court which sits successively in different places in its circuit (see CIRCUIT, 7 a). Specif.: a In Scotland, a court that sits in the various principal towns, with a jurisdiction analogous to the English courts of assize. b In the United States, certain Federal courts below the Circuit Court of Appeals and above the District Courts, the full bench of which consists of a designated justice of the Supreme Court (the circuit justice), a special circuit judge, and the judge of the district court, any two of whom may hold the court. These Circuit Courts have a statutory jurisdiction both in law and equity. Some of the States also have circuit courts, with statutory jurisdiction in matters of State cognizance.

cir'cu-i'tion (sûr'kū-ĭsh'ŭn), n. [L. circuitio. See CIRCUIT.] Act of circuiting, or going round; hence, circumlocution, or circuitous mode of reasoning or arguing. Archaic.

cir-cu'i-tous (sẽr-kū'ĭ-tŭs), a. [LL. circuitosus.] Going round in a circuit; roundabout; indirect; as, a circuitous road; a circuitous manner of accomplishing an end.

Syn. — Roundabout, winding, indirect; curved, serpentine, flexuous; twisted, mazy, labyrinthine, crooked; deviating, rambling, wandering, vagrant; disingenuous, underhand, deceitful. — CIRCUITOUS, SINUOUS, TORTUOUS, DEVIOUS, OBLIQUE agree in suggesting the opposite of directness, lit. or fig. CIRCUITOUS implies a roundabout, SINUOUS, a winding or undulating, TORTUOUS, a twisted, course or (fig.) method of procedure; as, "The shorn and parceled Oxus strains along . . . a foil'd circuitous wanderer" (M. Arnold); "Here Ouse, slow winding through a level plain . . . conducts the eye along his sinuous course" (Cowper); "my sinuous, easy, unpolemical mode of proceeding" (M. Arnold); "How sweetly dost thou mix with the blood, and help it through the most difficult and tortuous passages to the heart!" (Sterne); "As we track Elizabeth through her tortuous mazes of lying and intrigue" (J. R. Green). DEVIOUS applies to that which is off the direct course, lit. or fig.; OBLIQUE, to that which diverges from a straight line, or (fig.) from directness or rectitude; as, "As if it lurked in devious ways, and were to be tracked through bush and brier" (H. James); "All censure of a man's self is oblique praise" (Johnson). See DEVIATE, CROOKED.

cir-cu'i-ty (-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [Cf. OF. circuité.] 1. Compass; circuit. Obs.

2. A going round in a circle or circuit; a course not direct; circuitousness; a roundabout way of proceeding.

circuity of action, Law, a longer course of proceedings than is necessary to attain the object in view.

cir'cu-lant (sûr'kū-lănt), n. [L. circulans, p. pr. of circulare.] Math. A determinant in which each row is derived from the preceding by cyclic permutation, each constituent being pushed into the next column and the last into the first, so that the constituents of the principal diagonal are all the same.

cir'cu-lar (-lăr), a. [L. circularis, fr. circulus circle: cf. F. circulaire, OF. also circulier. See CIRCLE.] 1. In the form of, or bounded by, a circle; round.

2. Perfect; complete. Obs.

A man so absolute and circular
In all those wished-for rarities that may take A virgin captive. Massinger.

3. Moving in or describing a circle; as, circular motion.

4. Moving or happening in a cycle of repetition; constituting a link in a circular chain. Emerson.

5. Circuitous; roundabout; indirect.

6. Logic. Of the nature of a circle (in sense 9); reasoning in a circle; begging the question.

7. Adhering to a fixed circle of legends; cyclic. See CYCLIC POETS. Obs. & R.

8. Addressed to, affecting, or pertaining to, a circle, or to a number of persons having a common interest; intended for circulation; as, a circular letter.

9 Math. Of or pertaining to the circle or its properties; as, circular arc; circular measure.

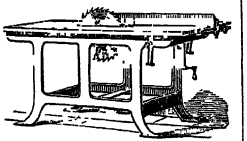
10. Repeating or renewing itself automatically; continuing indefinitely by mere repetition; as, respiration is a circular process.

circular arc, any portion of a circle. — c canon. Music. a One of which the subject leads back to its own beginning, so that it may be endlessly repeated; a perpetual canon. b One whose repetitions modulate through a circle of keys. — c. constant, Math., the ratio of the circumference of a circle to its diameter. See PI, n., 2. — c. cubics, Math., curves of third order passing through the two circular points at infinity. — c. error, the error in a timepiece resulting from variations in the extent of the arc described by the pendulum. — c. function, a trigonometrical function, esp. an inverse trigonometrical function. — c. inch, the area of a circle of one inch diameter, used as a unit of measure for circles; 0.7854 sq. in. — c. insanity, a form of insanity characterized by alternating periods of depression or melancholia and excitement or mania which may be interrupted by lucid intervals. — c. instruments, mathematical or nautical instruments, for measuring angles, in which the graduation extends round the whole circle, or through 360°. — c. integral, Math., an integral whose path of integration is a circle about a pole as center, in the plane of the complex variable. — c. line. Geom. a A line through a circular point at infinity, or tangent to the absolute. b Any of the straight lines pertaining to the circle, as sines, tangents, secants, etc. — c. measure. Math. a That in which the radian is taken as the unit angle. See RADIAN. b Angular measure. — c. measure of an angle, Math., that in which the unit angle has its measuring arc equal to the radius of the circle. — c. micrometer, a metallic ring fixed in the focus of the object glass of a telescope, and used to determine differences of right ascension and declination by observing the times when objects cross the inner or outer periphery of the ring; — called also annular, or ring, micrometer. — c. mil, a unit used for the measurement of the area of the cross section of wires, tubes, and rods, being the area of a circle whose diameter is one mil; 0.000000785 of a square inch. — c. note. a A circular letter, esp. one used in diplomacy. b A form of letter of credit. See under LETTER. — c. numbers, Arith., those whose powers terminate in the same digits as the numbers themselves; thus $5^4 = 625$, $6^3 = 216$, $11^2 = 121$. — c. pitch. Mech. See PITCH, n., 11 a. — c. plane, Math., a plane tangent to the absolute. — c. points at infinity, Geom., two imaginary points in a plane, at infinity, the common intersection of all circles in the plane; — called also focoids. — c. polarization. Optics. See POLARIZATION. — c. quadrat, Print., a quadrat curved on one side. — c. sailing a = SPHERICAL SAILING. b Great circle sailing. — c. saw, a thin steel disk with teeth (usually forward set) on its periphery, used by revolving it upon a spindle at high speed, ordinarily at about five hundred revolutions per minute for wood saws; also, a machine comprising such a saw as its chief essential. Called also buzz saw. — c. scale, any scale insect of the genus Aspidiotus, so named from the round shieldlike form of the adult female scale. They include many injurious species, as the San José scale, the red scale (A. aurantii) of the orange, etc. — c. sinus, Anat., a circular venous channel at the base of the brain, formed by the intercavernous sinuses which connect the cavernous sinuses of each side, passing one in front and one behind the pituitary body. — c. storm, a violent cyclonic storm, as a typhoon. — c. units, Elec., units based on the area of a circle with unit diameter.



Circular Saw and Saw Bench.

cir'cu-lar (sûr'kū-lăr), n. [Cf. (for sense 2) F. circulaire, lettre circulaire. See CIRCULAR, a.] 1. A circular figure, space, or object, as a brick.

2. A circular letter, note, or paper, usually printed, copies of which are addressed or given to various persons. Circular is defined for purposes of United States post-office classification by Act of Congress of March 3, 1879, c. 180.

3. A long sleeveless cloak, not shaped to the figure.

cir'cu-lar'i-ty (sûr'kū-lăr'ĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [LL. circularitas.] 1. Quality or state of being circular; circular form or position.

2. That which is circular; a circular space. Obs.

cir'cu-lar-ize (sûr'kū-lăr-īz), v. t.; CIR'CU-LAR-IZED (-īzd); CIR'CU-LAR-IZ'ING (-īz'ĭng). 1. To make circular.

2. a To send circulars to, esp. for advertising purposes; to ply with circulars. b To turn into, or use as a copy for, a circular; also, to advertise by circulars, as a book. Cant.

— cir'cu-lar-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ī-zā'-), n. — cir'cu-lar-iz'er (-īz'ẽr), n.

cir'cu-late (-lāt), v. i.; CIR'CU-LAT'ED (-lāt'ĕd); CIR'CU-LAT'ING (-lāt'ĭng). [L. circulatus, p. p. of circulare, v. t., to surround, make round, circulari, v. i., to gather into a circle. See CIRCLE.] 1. To move or revolve in a circle or circuit, or circuitously, or (Obs.) round an axis; to move round and return to the same point, as the blood from the heart through the arteries and veins to the heart again.

2. To pass or go about from place to place, from person to person, as in a social circle, or from hand to hand; to be diffused; as, money circulates; a story circulates; specif., of a book, newspaper, etc., to go into the hands of readers.

3. Math. To have a period of two or more figures which recurs or is repeated ad infinitum; to recur or be repeated ad infinitum; as, .354354354...; — said of a decimal or of the recurring period or expression. Less strictly, repeating decimals, or those in which one figure recurs or is repeated ad infinitum, are also called circulating decimals.

cir'cu-late, v. t. 1. Old Chem. To subject to continuous redistillation in a closed vessel.

2. To make the circuit of; encompass. Obs.

3. To cause to circulate; as, to circulate a report; to circulate bills of credit; to circulate the Bible.

Syn. — Spread, diffuse, propagate, disseminate.

circulating boiler, a boiler in which circulation of the water is secured, usually by unequal heating. — circulating capital. Pol. Econ. See 2d CAPITAL, n., 3. — c., or circulatory, decimal, a decimal that circulates. See CIRCULATE, v. i., 3. — c element, Math., a function, A_q, of two integers, a and q, such that $A_q = 1$ when q is an exact multiple of a, but otherwise $A_q = 0$. — c. equation, Math., a difference equation whose coefficients change cyclically for successive values of the variable. — c. function, Math., a linear function of circulating elements of the same two integers, a variable q and a period a, of the form

When these numerical coefficients (the A's) fulfill the equations

$$A_0 + A_b + \cdots + A_{a-b} = 0$$
$$A_1 + A_{b+1} + \cdots + A_{a-b+1} = 0$$
$$A_2 + A_{b+2} + \cdots + A_{a-b+2} = 0 \text{ etc.},$$

for every b that divides a exactly, the circulating function is prime. — c. library, a library whose books are intended for circulation among subscribers or the public. — c. medium, a current medium of exchange, whether coin, bank notes, or government notes.

cir'cu-la'tion (sûr'kŭ-lā'shŭn), n. [L. circulatio: cf. F. circulation.] 1. In general, act or state of circulating.

2. Specif., a circling, revolution, or rotation, as on an axis or in an orbit; hence, a set or series of actions, etc., continuously repeated or alternated.

3. Act of moving in any course, other than a strict circle, which brings the moving body to the place where its motion began.

This continual circulation of human things Swift.

4. Physiol. a The movement of the blood in the vessels of the body, caused by the pulsations of the heart, so that it may supply nutriment and oxygen to all parts of the body, and carry the waste products to the organs of excretion. See BLOOD, RESPIRATION, HEART. In man and other mammals, and in birds, the circulation is called double, the blood making two distinct circuits. The pulmonary circulation starts from the right auricle of the heart, the blood passing successively to the right ventricle, the pulmonary arteries, the lungs (there becoming arterial), the pulmonary veins, and to the left auricle. There the systemic circulation begins, the blood (still arterial) passing to the left ventricle, the systemic arteries, the capillaries of various organs and tissues, and returning (now in a venous state) through the veins to the right auricle again. In reptiles and amphibians the two ventricular cavities are not completely separated, so that the arterial and venous blood becomes more or less mixed. In the fishes, which breathe by gills, the blood passes from the heart through the gills to the organs and tissues of the body, thus making only a single circuit. See also PORTAL VEIN. In the invertebrates the higher forms have a more or less complete and efficient circulation. In others the blood may simply flow about in the body cavity, while many internal parasites and the smaller and lower forms have no special circulating fluid, the nutrient matter passing from one cell to another by a process of osmosis. b Less frequently, the movement of the lymph; in plants, the flow of the sap. See SAP, TRANSLOCATION.

5. Plant Physiol. The streaming movement of the cytoplasm in plant cells. It differs from rotation (see ROTATION, 3) in that the current is not constant, but flows in different directions through the strands traversing the vacuole.

6. Act of passing from place to place or from person to person, or the extent to which this takes place, as of money in commercial transactions; transmission; diffusion or dissemination, or the measure of it, as of a book or newspaper.

7. A circulated statement or rumor. Obs. Burke.

8. That which is in circulation as the medium of exchange; circulating medium; currency; circulating coin, notes, bills, etc. Cf. CURRENCY.

circulation along a curve, Math., the line integral of the tangential component of the velocity vector, taken along the curve.

cir'cu-la'tor (-lā'tẽr), n. [Cf. L. circulator a peddler.] One that circulates; specif.: a A mountebank who collects people around himself; a quack. Obs. Heywood. b A person who circulates coin, news, etc., or, esp., tales or scandal. c Math. A circulating function.

cir'cu-la-to-ry (-lă-tō-rĭ), a. [L. circulatorius pert. to a mountebank: cf. F. circulatoire.] 1. Of or pert. to circulation, as of the blood, air, etc.; causing, or concerned in, circulation; as, circulatory organs; circulatory diseases.

2. Old Chem. Of or pertaining to the process of "circulating" liquids; as, circulatory vessels.

circulatory decimal. = CIRCULATING DECIMAL.

cir'cu-la-to-ry, n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). Old Chem. A vessel in which to "circulate" liquids, as a pelican.

cir'cum- (sûr'kŭm-). [Akin to circle, circus] 1. A Latin adverb and preposition, used as a prefix in many English words, and signifying around, about, or round about.

2. Math. An abbreviation for circumscribed; — used in many geometrical terms; as in *circum*circle, *circum*cone, *circum*conic, *circum*parallelogram, *circum*pentagon, etc.

☞ The reference "See CIRCUM-" is sometimes given as the only definition of a word beginning in circum-, if its meaning can readily be gathered from the definitions of the prefix and the root word.

cir'cum-am'ba-ges (-ăm'bā-jēz), n. pl. [circum- + ambages.] Roundabout or indirect course (of speech); circumlocutions. Rare. — cir'cum-am-ba'gious (-ăm-bā'jŭs), a.

circuit edges. See CIRCUIT BINDING.

cir'cuit-eer' (sûr'kĭt-ẽr'), v. i.; CIR'CUIT-EER'ING. To travel or make a circuit. Obs. or R.

cir'cui-tor (sûr'kĭ-tẽr), n. [L.] One who makes a circuit, as an inspector.

‖ cir-cu'i-tus ... ver-bo'rum (sûr-kū'ĭ-tŭs vûr-bō'rŭm). [L.] Rhet. Lit., a circuit of words; a period.

Cicero (De Oratore, III. 49).

cir'cu-la-ble (sûr'kū-lă-b'l), a. Capable of circulation.

cir'cu-lar-ism (-lăr-ĭz'm), n. Theory of circularity of space.

cir'cu-lar-ly, adv. of CIRCULAR.

cir'cu-let (sûr'kū-lĕt), n. † CIRCLET.

cir'cum-ad-ja'cent (sûr'kŭm-ă-jā'sĕnt), a. Immediately surrounding.

cis'soid (sĭs'oid), n. [Gr. κισσοειδής like ivy; κισσός ivy + εἶδος form.] Geom. A curve invented by Diocles (ᵓ 180 B. C.) for the purpose of solving the celebrated Delian problem of the ancient geometry, viz., to duplicate a cube, or to construct two geometrical means between two given line segments. Its equation is $x^3 = y^2 (a-x)$. It is of third degree and class, with one cusp A, and asymptote FEG, and a point of inflection at infinity. In the generalized cissoid some other curve may replace the circle. — cis-soi'dal (sĭs-oi'dăl), a.

Cissoid of Diocles. ABED Generating Circle; C Center; BCD Diameter; FEG Asymptote.

cis'soid, a. Math. Lying between the concave sides of two intersecting curves; as, a cissoid angle; — opposed to sistroid.

Cis'sus (sĭs'ŭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. κισσός ivy.] Bot. A genus of erect or, more often, climbing vitaceous shrubs, nearly allied to Vitis, but differing in the tetramerous corolla. The 250 species are widely distributed in the tropics, and differ much in habit. Several are cultivated. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus. See TRAILING BEGONIA.

cist (sĭst), n. [L. cista box, chest, Gr. κίστη. Cf. CHEST.] Class. Archæol. A box or chest, esp. for sacred utensils.

cist (sĭst), n. [W. kist a chest or coffer, L. cista.] Archæol. A sepulchral chest or chamber; a cistvaen.

Cis-ta'ce-æ (sĭs-tā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. See CISTUS.] Bot. A family of shrubs or somewhat woody herbs (order Hypericales), the rockrose family, having regular, often showy flowers, with numerous stamens, simple style, 1-several-celled ovary, and orthotropous ovules. The genera are Cistus, Helianthemum, Lechea, and Hudsonia, chiefly natives of the Northern Hemisphere. — cis-ta'ceous (-shŭs), a.

Cis-ter'cian (sĭs-tûr'shăn), n. [LL. Cistercium, F. Cîteaux, a convent not far from Dijon, in France: cf. F. cistercien.] Eccl. A monk belonging to a famous and once flourishing branch of the Benedictine Order, established in 1098 at Cîteaux, in France, by Robert, abbot of Molesme. For two hundred years the Cistercians followed the rule of St. Benedict in all its rigor. There are now a few convents in Europe and America. Their habit was at first brown, but was soon changed to white. — a. Of or pert. to the Cistercians.

Cistercian Monk.

cis'tern (sĭs'tẽrn), n. [ME. cisterne, OF. cisterne, F. citerne, fr. L. cisterna, fr. cista box, chest. See CIST; cf. CHEST.] 1. An artificial reservoir or tank for holding or storing water or other liquids.

2 In various specific senses: a A laver. Obs. b A large vessel for use at the dining table. Obs. c Malting. The water tank in which the grain is steeped. d In plate-glass making, a cuvette. e In a barometer, the cup for holding the mercury f In a condensing steam engine, the vessel surrounding the condenser, containing the injection water.

3. A natural reservoir; a hollow place containing water. "The wide cisterns of the lakes." Blackmore.

4. A sac or cavity containing fluid in an organism.

cistern of Pecquet (pĕ'kā'), the receptaculum chyli.

cist'ic (sĭs'tĭk), a. Archæol. Of the nature of a cist.

cis-toph'o-rus (sĭs-tŏf'ō-rŭs), n.; pl. -ORI (-rī). [L., fr. Gr. κιστοφόρος; κιστη box, chest + φέρειν to bear.] An ancient silver coin of Asia Minor. It had a cista stamped on it. There were three values, the tetradrachm, didrachm, and drachm. See DRACHMA. — cis'to-phor'ic (sĭs'tō-fŏr'ĭk), a.

Cis'tus (sĭs'tŭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. κίστος, κισθος, rockrose.] Bot. A genus of shrubs, the rockroses, typifying the family Cistaceæ, widely distributed in the Mediterranean region and the Orient. Many are cultivated for their handsome white or yellow flowers; some yield useful gums or resins. Among the more important species are C. creticus, C. ladaniferus, C. laurifolius, etc. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus. See MYRRH, LADANUM.

cist'vaen (kĭst'vīn), n. [W. cistfaen.] Archæol. A chest or box-shaped tomb in a barrow, esp. one designed for urns containing the ashes of cremated dead.

cit (sĭt), n. [Short for citizen.] An inhabitant of a city; a citizen or townsman as distinguished from a countryman, or a tradesman or shopkeeper as distinguished from a gentleman; a middle-class person; — usually more or less contemptuous. "Insulted as a cit." Johnson.

cit'a-del (sĭt'ă-dĕl), n. [F. citadelle, It. cittadella, dim. of città city, fr. L. civitas. See CITY.] 1. A fortress in or near a fortified city, commanding the city and fortifications, and intended to control the city or to serve as a final point of defense.

2. In general, a strong fortress; a stronghold.

3. In heavily armored ships of war, the protected central structure, which contains the engines, boilers, magazines, and other vital parts of the ship, and in and upon which the broadside battery is largely mounted.

Syn. — Stronghold, fort, fortress, fortification.

ci-ta'tion (sī-tā'shŭn), n. [ME. citacioun, F. citation, LL. citatio, fr. L. citare to cite. See CITE.] 1. An official summons or notice given to a person to appear, as before a tribunal of justice; hence, any summons; the paper containing such summons or notice.

2. Act of citing a passage from a book, or from another person, in its own words; also, the passage or words cited; quotation; specif., Law, a reference to decided cases, or books of authority.

3. Enumeration; mention; as, a citation of facts.

ci'ta-to-ry (sī'tă-tō-rĭ), a. [LL. citatorius.] Having the power or faculty of citing, or summoning; of the nature of a citation, or summons; as, letters citatory.

cite (sīt), v. t.; CIT'ED (sīt'ĕd); CIT'ING (sīt'ĭng). [F. citer, fr. L. citare, intens. of cire, ciēre, to put in motion, to excite; akin to Gr. κίειν to go, Skr. çi to sharpen.] 1. To call upon officially or authoritatively to appear before a court, to summon.

Cited by the finger of God. De Quincey

2. To summon or call, in general; to arouse to action.

3. To quote, as a passage from a book, usually by way of authority or proof.

The devil can cite Scripture for his purpose. Shak.

4. To bring forward, adduce, allege, or refer to, as for support, proof, illustration, or confirmation.

The imperfections which you have cited. Shak.

5. To bespeak; to indicate. Obs.

Aged honor cites a virtuous youth. Shak.

Syn. — Adduce, repeat, extract. — CITE, QUOTE. To QUOTE is to reproduce exactly the words of another; as, "Chaucer's account of himself must be quoted, for the delight and sympathy of all true readers" (Leigh Hunt). More loosely, to quote is to refer a statement in general terms to some one as its author, without implying the repetition of precisely the original words; as, Don't quote me in this connection. To CITE, as here compared (see CALL), is to adduce an author or a passage as evidence or as an authority; as, "I demanded of him to bring out his proof of his application in form and in detail. . . . But he persevered in his refusal to cite any distinct passages from any writing of mine" (J. H. Newman).

Quoting of authors is most for matters of fact, and then I cite them as I would produce a witness Selden.

cith'a-ra (sĭth'ă-ra), n. [L Cf. CITTERN, GUITAR.] Music. An ancient instrument of the lyre class.

Cith'a-rex'y-lum (sĭth'ă-rĕk'sĭ-lŭm), n. [NL.; Gr. κιθάρα cithara + ξύλον wood.] Bot. A genus of verbenaceous trees and shrubs of the warmer parts of America. The hard durable wood is called fiddlewood or bois cotelet. They have small panicled flowers, and berrylike drupes seated in the persistent calyx.

cit'i-fy (sĭt'ĭ-fī), v. t. [city + -fy.] To render citylike; to stamp with, or conform to, city characteristics, manners, etc.; — usually in p. p. or p. a. cit'i-fied (-fīd).

cit'i-zen (-zĕn), n. [ME. citezein, citesen, OF. citeain, F. citoyen, fr. cité city. The inserted consonant is perh. due to influence of denizen. See CITY; cf. CIT.] 1. An inhabitant of a city or town, esp one who enjoys its freedom and privileges; a freeman or burgess of a city, as distinguished from a foreigner, or one not entitled to its franchises.

2. An inhabitant of a city; a townsman; specif., a civilian, as opposed to a soldier, policeman, etc. Shak.

3. A member of a state; a person, native or naturalized, of either sex, who owes allegiance to a government, and is entitled to reciprocal protection from it; — opposed to alien. Between the word citizen, answering in meaning to the Latin civis and the Greek πολίτης, and the word subject there is a fundamental distinction in meaning. Subject implies a master or lord to whom the subject owes a personal allegiance; citizen does not, but implies membership of, and the tie of loyalty to, a state, with the reciprocal right to the enjoyment of the privileges and protection flowing from these A citizen as such is entitled to the protection of life, liberty, and property at home and abroad, but is not necessarily vested with the suffrage or other political rights. (Cf. ALLEGIANCE.) In the construction of statutes citizen is sometimes made to include corporation, as that has a certain recognition by the law, though properly speaking not capable of being a citizen.

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside U. S. Const., Amend. XIV

4. Loosely, a person, not native nor naturalized, domiciled in a country, and subject to its territorial jurisdiction; a denizen.

5. An inhabitant or occupant. "Some small forest citizen." Hawthorne.

cit'ra-con'ic (sĭt'rā-kŏn'ĭk), a. [citric + aconitic.] Chem. Pertaining to or designating a white, crystalline, deliquescent acid, $C_3H_3(CO_2H)_3$, obtained by distillation of citric acid. It is the methyl derivative of maleic acid.

cit'ral (sĭt'răl), n. [citron + aldehyde.] Org. Chem. A highly odoriferous liquid aldehyde, C_9H_{15}·CHO, found in oil of lemon, oil of orange, bay leaves, etc., and formed by the oxidation of geraniol; — called also geranial. It is used in making artificial perfumes.

cit'range (sĭt'rānj), n. [Citrus + orange.] A citrous fruit produced by a cross between the sweet orange and the trifoliate orange (Citrus trifoliata). It is more acid and has a more pronounced aroma than the orange; the tree is hardier. There are several varieties.

cit'rate (sĭt'rāt), n. [From CITRIC.] Chem. A salt or ester of citric acid.

ci-traz'ic (sĭ-trăz'ĭk), a. Also cit'ra-zin'ic. [citric + azote + -ic.] Chem. Pertaining to or designating a crystalline hydroxy acid, $C_6H_5O_4N$, formed by condensation from an amide of citric acid. It is a pyridine derivative.

cit'rene (sĭt'rēn), n. [See CITRON.] The dextro variety of limonene. See LIMONENE.

cit're-ous (sĭt'rē-ŭs), a. Lemon-colored; citrine.

cit'ric (sĭt'rĭk), a. [Cf. F. citrique. See CITRON.] Org. Chem. Pertaining to or designating a tribasic acid, C_3H_4-OH $(CO_2H)_3$, extracted from lemons, currants, gooseberries, etc., as a white crystalline substance having a pleasant sour taste. It is used in making artificial lemonade and as a resist or discharge in printing certain fabrics.

cit'ril (sĭt'rĭl), n., or citril finch. [Apparently named fr. its color. Cf. CITRINE.] A common finch (Chrysomitris citrinella) of southern and central Europe, with greenish yellow plumage.

cit'rine (-rĭn), a. [F. citrin. See CITRON.] Like a citron or lemon; specif., lemon-colored, greenish or gray yellow.

The citrine odor of the bergamot. Sir G. Parker.

citrine ointment, Pharm., a yellowish mercurial ointment, the unguentum hydrargyri nitratis, used as an alterative application in various skin diseases.

2. A yellow variety of quartz used as a gem; false topaz.

ci-trom'e-ter (sĭ-trŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [See CITRON, -METER.] A hydrometer for determining the specific gravity of lemon juice, etc., in the preparation of citric acid.

cit'ron (sĭt'rŭn; see note under APRON), n. [F. citron, LL. citro, from L. citrus citron tree (cf. citreum, sc. malum, a citron), from Gr. κιτρον citron, of unknown origin.] 1. Orig., the fruit of any variety of Citrus medica, thus including the lime and the lemon (see CITRUS); now, specif., the fruit of C. medica genuina, the typical subspecies. Also, the tree that bears this fruit. The fruit resembles the lemon in appearance and structure, but is larger, and not umbonate. The thick rind is used extensively in preserves and confections.

2. = CITRON MELON.

3. Citrine color.

4. Citron water. Obs.

citron butterfly. A large, nearly plain yellow butterfly (Catopsilia eubule) of the southern United States.

cit'ron-el'la (sĭt'rŭn-ĕl'a), n. [See CITRON.] a = CITRONELLA GRASS. b The horse balm (Collinsonia canadensis). See COLLINSONIA.

citronella grass. A fragrant grass (Andropogon nardus) of southern Asia, which yields citronella oil.

cit'ron-el'lal (-lăl), n. [citronella + aldehyde.] An odoriferous liquid aldehyde, C_9H_{17}·CHO, of the olefine series, found in oil of lemon, citrouella oil, and other essential oils, and also formed by oxidation of citronellol. On being itself oxidized it yields citronellic acid, $C_9H_{17}CO_2H$.

cit'ron-el'lol (-ĕl'ōl; -ŏl), n. [citronella + 1st -ol.] Chem. An alcohol, $C_{10}H_{19}OH$, obtained as an odoriferous oily liquid from oil of rose, geranium oil, etc.

citron melon. One of a race of watermelons having a rather small fruit, the hard flesh of which is used like the true citron, and hence is often called citron.

citron tree. The tree which bears the citron. See CITRON, 1.

cit'rous (sĭt'rŭs), a. Pertaining to the genus Citrus; as, citrous fruits.

Ci-trul'lus (sĭ-trŭl'ŭs), n. [LL., fr. L. citrus citron.] Bot. A small genus of African cucurbitaceous plants having lobed leaves and solitary flowers with a bell-shaped calyx tube. The watermelon is C. citrullus and the colocynth is C. colocynthis.

Cit'rus (sĭt'rŭs), n. [L., a citron tree.] Bot. A small genus of rutaceous, often thorny trees and shrubs, natives originally of tropical Asia, but now widely cultivated for their fruits, known as citrous fruits, constituting one of the most important horticultural products. The genus is characterized by the alternate unifoliolate or trifoliolate leaves with a winged petiole, tetramerous flowers with many stamens; and large baccate fruit with pulpy endocarp and hard exocarp. Each of the species includes several distinct subspecies. C. medica yields the citron, lemon, and lime, C. aurantium the sweet, bitter, and Bergamot oranges, etc. See CITRON, CITRANGE, ORANGE, LEMON, LIME, KUMQUAT, SHADDOCK, TANGELO, MANDARIN, 4.

cit'tern-head', n. Blockhead; dunce; — a term of contempt, the allusion being to the grotesquely carved head with which the handle of a cittern often ended. Obs. Marston. — cit'tern-head'ed, a. Obs.

cit'y (sĭt'ĭ), n.; pl. CITIES (-ĭz). [ME. cite, F. cité, fr. L. civitas citizenship, state, city, fr. civis citizen; perh. akin to Goth. heiwa (in heiwafrauja man of the house), AS. hīwan, pl., members of a family, servants, hīred family, G. heirath marriage, prop., providing a house, E. hind a peasant] 1. A town or other inhabited place; — frequently used in versions of the Bible to translate the L. civitas or Greek πολις, which were often applied to mere villages, as Bethlehem and Nain.

He came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth Matt. ii. 23.

2. Vaguely, any large, important, or noted town or inhabited place, so called by way of distinction.

3. In Great Britain and Ireland, any of various towns or places of which the term city is a traditional or honorary designation. In these cases the name city has no legal significance, and does not import the possession of any powers. In England the term city from early times was usually (but not always) applied to a cathedral town, and for several centuries it was understood to have a quasi legal meaning of "an incorporated town which is or has been an episcopal see." This sense, however, never became fixed as a matter of law, and the title city is now occasionally conferred by royal authority on important boroughs that are not episcopal sees, as Leeds. In Scotland and Ireland the term city, apparently borrowed from English usage, seems to have been applied to all places, whether towns, boroughs, or hamlets, and whether incorporated or not, which were episcopal seats; but it came to be popularly confined to the more important ones and extended to a few other places, not episcopal seats, of great importance. Recently the title has been granted by royal charter to important boroughs as in England.

A city is a town incorporated; which is, or has been, the see of a bishop; and though the bishopric has been dissolved, as at Westminster, it yet remaineth a city Blackstone

4. In the United States, a municipality, incorporated and governed, usually, by a mayor and a board of aldermen or of councilmen or by a city council consisting of a board of aldermen and a board of councilmen. There is no uniformity in the legal characteristics of a city throughout the United States. In most States the name city denotes a municipality ranking higher in population than a town, borough, or village, but in many States, esp. in the West, the name relates more especially to the form of government, there being often cities of several classes as to population. In many cases such cities are of small population, and often also the name is given in anticipation.

5. In Canada, a municipality of the highest class, varying in character in the different provinces.

6. The collective body of citizens, or inhabitants of a city "The whole city came out to meet Jesus." Matt. viii. 34.

7. Antig. a A central place to which the confederated families living in the vicinity went for common purposes, as worship, protection, etc.

The city of Homer's day . . . was generally a citadel upon a hill to which the confederated families living in the country round about it resorted in times of actual or threatened invasion. It contained the temples of the gods and was the seat of the common worship. In it was the market place, also, in which the trade of the countryside centered. It saw the festivals, the sacrifices, the councils, the courts, the armed musterings of the people. But it did not see their daily life. That was not lived in common, but apart in clans. Woodrow Wilson b The confederation or union of clans resorting to such a center; hence, the political or sovereign body formed by such a community; a city-state; — an equivalent of Gr. πόλις, L. civitas.

Syn. — Polished, refined, obliging, suave, well-bred, high-bred, elegant, respectful, condescending. — CIVIL, POLITE, COURTEOUS, COURTLY, URBANE, AFFABLE, COMPLAISANT, GRACIOUS. CIVIL, in present usage, commonly suggests the bare fulfillment of the ordinary requirements of social intercourse; it frequently implies little more than forbearance from rudeness; as, "Of such independence that he occasionally forgot to be merely civil" (Atlantic Monthly); "This man . . . cut short one of our party, and addressed a silly remark to Spencer. . . . Spencer's answer was civil, but brief and not inviting" (J. Fiske). POLITE (see POLITE), while sometimes suggesting a merely perfunctory attitude, is more positive than civil; it commonly implies thoughtfulness for the feelings of others, united with polish of manners and address; as, "Nothing was ever so serene as his countenance, so unembarrassed as his manner, so polite as his whole demeanor" (Landor). COURTEOUS implies more considerate and dignified, COURTLY, more high-bred, stately and formal, observance of due civilities; as, "With courteous brevity I signify my indifference to contraband trade" (Carlyle); "courteous usages refined by art" (Wordsworth); "the devout and delicate Prioress, the courtly and valiant Knight" (Crabbe); "his great-uncle, a courtly and stately old gentleman" (J. A. Symonds). URBANE adds the implication of suavity and elegance; AFFABLE, of ease and (frequently) condescension; as, "I had reason to praise [in Paris] the national urbanity, which from the court has diffused its gentle influence to the shop, the cottage, and the schools" (Gibbon); "I don't find . . . that his wealth has made him arrogant and inaccessible; on the contrary, he takes great pains to appear affable and gracious" (Smollett); "He is so unsufferably affable that every man near him would like to give him a beating" (Thackeray). COMPLAISANT implies an obliging and (sometimes) over-compliant or yielding disposition; GRACIOUS, a serene and benignant bearing towards others; as, "Her importunity prevailed with me, and I am extremely glad I was so complaisant" (Lady M. W. Montague); "Consciousness of unquestioned position makes people gracious in proper measure to all" (Holmes); "Ah! the gracious lady! what divine condescension! what ineffable courtesy!" (M. Hewlett). See SUAVE, COMPLACENCY, CEREMONIAL.

civil action, suit, or proceeding, one to enforce the private rights or redress the private wrongs of an individual, that is, one not involving a criminal proceeding. Cf. CRIMINAL, FINE, n. — c. contract, Law, specif., a contract of marriage made without religious sanction and solemnization. — c. corporation. See CORPORATION. — c. county. See COUNTY, 3. — c. damages, Law, actual damage which a person injured in person, property, or means of support by the intoxication of another may recover against the person who supplied to him the liquor which caused the intoxication, under the provisions of a statute (called a civil damages act, bill, or law) enacted for that purpose in many States of the United States. — c. day. = DAY, 4. — c. death, Law, the change of status of a person equivalent in its legal consequences to natural death. See DEATH. — c. district, a district formed for purposes of civil government; specif., in some States of the United States, as Tennessee, a minor subdivision of the county. — c. engineer, one who practices or is versed in civil engineering. — c. imprisonment, Law, imprisonment by civil process, as for debt. — c. law. As a translation of the Roman jus civile · 1. Roman Law. The peculiar local law of a state, and specif. of Rome, as distinguished from the jus gentium, and jus naturale; also, the customary law or that adopted by the people, as distinguished from the prætorian and other law established by edicts. 2. a In the Middle Ages, the Roman law as set forth (chiefly) in the Justinian codes, as distinguished from the canon law. b In modern English usage, the body of private law that has developed from the Roman law in the states where the legal system is still substantially Roman, but has been influenced by Teutonic, ecclesiastical, and purely modern institutions. England and the United States are practically the only modern civilized countries which have not adopted the Civil-law system; and in some portions of the British Empire (as Cape Colony and Quebec) and of the United States (as Louisiana and to some extent New Mexico and other southwestern States) the Civil-law system, introduced by the original settlers, is still retained. (In this sense usually written Civil law.) — c. liberty, exemption from arbitrary interference with person, opinion, or property, on the part of the government under which one lives.

Paley's admired definition of civil liberty appears to me to be obnoxious to . . . objection. Civil liberty, he says, is the not being restrained by any law but which conduces in a greater degree to the public welfare; and this is distinguished from natural liberty, which is the not being restrained at all. John Austin.

— c. list, in Great Britain, orig., a list of the charges for the support of the civil officers of the state, to pay for which a special appropriation of public money was made; hence, the civil officers of government, as judges, ambassadors, secretaries, etc. In modern use, the account of, or appropriation of, money made by Parliament for the expenses of the sovereign and his household. The civil list formerly included provision for the payment of pensions granted by royal bounty (civil list pensions), but the Civil List Act of 1901 excluded them from the charges on the civil list. — C. Lord, a member of the British Board of Admiralty who supervises the civil branch of its administration, including buildings, labor, contracts, and most of the civil staff of naval establishments, and the charitable work of Greenwich Hospital. — civil parish. See PARISH. — c. remedy, Law, the remedy by action given to a person injured, as opposed to a criminal prosecution. — c. rights, Law, those rights the enjoyment of which does not involve participation in the establishment, support, or management of the government; — distinguished from political rights. The term is used chiefly of the rights secured to citizens of the United States by the 13th & 14th Amendments to the Constitution, and certain acts called civil rights acts or bills, passed by Congress April 9, 1866, May 31, 1870, and March 1, 1875, respectively, for the purpose of securing to all citizens equal civil rights by abolishing the civil incidents of involuntary servitude. Certain cases in which these acts were interpreted (and secs. 1 & 2 of the act of 1875, declared unconstitutional) by the Supreme Court in 1883 (109 U. S. 3) are called the civil rights cases. — c. servant, a member of the civil service, esp. that of British India. Eng. — c. service, all service rendered to and paid for by a state or nation other than that pertaining to military, naval, legislative, and judicial affairs; all branches of the public administrative service which are not military or naval; orig., that branch of the British East India Company service conducted by the covenanted servants not belonging to the army or navy. — C. Service Commission, in the United States, a commission appointed by the President, consisting of three members, not more than two of whom may be adherents of the same party, which has the control, through examinations, of appointments and promotions in the classified civil service. It was created by act of Jan 16, 1883 (22 Stat. 403). — c. service reform, the substitution of business principles and methods for political methods in the conduct of the civil service, esp. the merit system instead of the spoils system in the matter of appointments to office. — c. suit. = CIVIL ACTION. — c. war, a war between different sections or parties of the same country or nation; specif.: a [cap.] In Great Britain, the war between the Parliamentarians and Royalists (1642–46). The struggle of 1648–52 is called the Second Civil War. b [cap.] In the United States, the War of Secession, 1861–65, between the seceding Southern States and the Federal government. — c. year. See YEAR.

ci-vil'ian (sĭ-vĭl'yăn), n. [From CIVIL.] 1. Law. a A student of, or proficient in, the civil law (of Rome) as especially distinguished from the canon law and the English common law; a teacher, practitioner, student, or the like of the Civil law. b One especially versed in or devoted to the law affecting civil rights and remedies. Rare.

2. Theol. "One who, despising the righteousness of Christ, did yet follow after a certain civil righteousness, a justitia civilis of his own." Trench. Obs.

3. One whose pursuits are those of civil life, not military, naval, nor clerical; specif.: a Formerly, one in the covenanted service of the East India Company; — called a statutory civilian when a native (as being appointed under special statutory provisions). Now, an employee in the imperial civil service of India. b One not professionally employed in the army or navy.

civ'i-li-za'tion (sĭv'ĭ-lĭ-zā'shŭn), n. [Cf. F. civilisation.]

1. Law. Act of rendering a criminal process civil. Obs.

2. Act of civilizing, or state of becoming civilized; advancement in social culture; as, a result of the Norman Conquest was the civilization of the Anglo-Saxons.

3. A state of social culture characterized by relative progress in the arts, science, and statecraft; variously: the culture characteristic of modern Europe; as, contact with civilization often proves fatal to savages; a distinctive national culture; as, French civilization; the relative advancement of a primitive or ancient people; as, the Mycenæan civilization; Aztec civilization. Except in the last of these uses, civilization is ordinarily distinguished from barbarism, as manifesting greater enlightenment and humanity. Both are distinguished from savagery, the culture of the least advanced peoples.

Our manners, our civilization, and all the good things connected with manners, and with civilization, have, in this European world of ours, depended for ages upon two principles — . . . the spirit of a gentleman, and the spirit of religion. Burke.

Syn. — CIVILIZATION, CULTURE, CULTIVATION, REFINEMENT. CIVILIZATION applies to human society, and designates an advanced state of material and social well-being. CULTURE, as applied to society, emphasizes the intellectual aspect of civilization; as applied to individuals, it suggests such enlightenment as is acquired by intercourse with what is best in civilized life, esp. as this enlightenment evinces itself in delicacy of taste and nicety of breeding. The term is occasionally abused by a somewhat arrogant and exclusive restriction of its meaning. CULTIVATION, while often interchangeable with culture, implies rather more frequently the process of which culture is the result. REFINEMENT (see DELICACY), as compared with culture, emphasizes the element of fineness, often even fastidiousness, of feeling. See EDUCATION.

They all have a certain refinement which they call civilization, but a nation is really civilized by acquiring the qualities it by nature is wanting in; and the Italians are no more civilized by virtue of their refinement alone than we are civilized by virtue of our energy alone. M. Arnold.

Culture being a pursuit of our total perfection by means of getting to know, on all the matters which most concern us, the best which has been thought and said in the world; and through this knowledge, turning a stream of fresh and free thought upon our stock notions and habits. M. Arnold.

Admiration for the union in him of extraordinary skill in execution with admirable cultivation of mind. Mrs. Humphry Ward.

clan (klăn), n. [Gael. clann offspring, descendants; akin to Ir. clann, cland, offspring, tribe, family; perh. from L. planta scion, slip, cutting. Cf. PLANT, n.] 1. A social group comprising a number of households the heads of which claim descent from a common ancestor, bear a common surname, and acknowledge the paramountcy of a chief who bears this name as a distinctive title (he is, for example, "the Macgregor" of the Macgregors, or of the clan Macgregor). Besides clansmen of the blood, the clan may include bondsmen, adopted foreigners, etc., and a great clan may include families, or subclans, bearing a variety of surnames. Such clans are in reality a specialized form of the tribe. They appear primarily among the Celts, especially of the Scottish Highlands, and are distinguished from the Irish septs (which nearly correspond to CLAN, 2). The clan chiefs in Scotland lost most of their distinctive powers in 1747. Cf. TARTAN.

2. A social group all the members of which are of common descent, traced only in one line (the father's in patriarchal, the mother's in matriarchal, societies), and do not intermarry. The clan differs from the family in that relationship is determined only in one line; from the tribe in that, where the clan system prevails, the tribe comprises several clans the members of each of which may marry only outside of his own clan (cf. EXOGAMY). Where the rule of exogamy and the fact of descent are signified by the totem (which see) the clan is called the totemic clan. Members of the same totemic clan may be found in widely separated tribes or hordes. Commonly the clan has its own leaders, under the tribal leaders, and its own religious rites. Cf. GENS.

In the clan system descent was probably at first reckoned only through the female line, consequently uterine ties alone constituted kinship, the father not being regarded as related even to his own children, and not considered as a member of the family. A. H. Keane.

3. A clique; a set, society, or party; a body of persons united by some common interest, — used contemptuously.

Partridge and the rest of his clan may hoot me. Smollett.
The whole clan of the enlightened among us. Burke.

clar'i-net' (klăr'ĭ-nĕt'; 277), n. [F. clarinette, dim. of clarine a kind of bell, fr. L. clarus. See CLEAR, cf. CLARION.] Music. 1. A wind instrument, consisting of a cylindrical tube with a bell-shaped opening at one end, and a mouthpiece at the other, having a single reed and played by means of holes and keys. Often improperly called clarionet.

Clarinet.

Its tones are rich and expressive, and have a compass of about 3¼ octaves, e to g‴. (See PITCH.) Owing to complexity of fingering, it is hard to play in keys of more than two sharps or flats. Clarinets are therefore made in different keys, as in B♭ and A, enabling the performer to play in those and their related keys, with the same fingering as for C and its related keys.

2. A soft 8-foot reed organ stop of similar quality of tone.

clar'i-on (klăr'ĭ-ŭn), n. [ME. clarioun, OF. clarion, F. clairon, LL. clario, claro;—so called from its clear tone, fr. L. clarus clear. See CLEAR.] 1 A kind of trumpet with clear and shrill tones. Now chiefly Poetic.

class (klăs), n. [F. classe, fr. L. classis class, collection, fleet; akin to Gr. κλῆσις a calling, καλεῖν to call, E. haul.]

1. Rom. Hist. Any one of the six divisions into which the Roman people were divided under the constitution ascribed to Servius Tullius. Five classes were formed according to property, each to furnish a certain number of equipped centuries to the army, while the sixth consisted of those not having property enough to warrant military equipment. Cf. TRIBE, 2.

2. A group of individuals ranked together as possessing common characteristics or as having the same status; as, the educated class; the lower classes.

3. Specif., the system of dividing society thus; caste; social rank, esp. high rank; as, the feeling of class; the classes, that portion of the community which is regarded, because of birth, wealth, education, etc., as being higher than, or distinct from, the masses.

We shall then have Mr. Gladstone's democracy with its cry of "the classes vs. the masses" — a motto subscribed to at present neither by the French nor ourselves. Class, in France no more than in America, implies caste. W. C. Brownell

4. a A body of students in a school or college grouped together as pursuing the same or equivalent studies; — often called a form in England. b An assembling of students, as for lecture or recitation; as, an announcement given out during class; also, the studies or instruction given or arranged for such a body. c In the United States, a body of students of an institution whose year of graduation is the same; as, the class of 1910.

5. A group of persons, things, qualities, or activities, having common characteristics or attributes; a set; a kind, description, species, or variety.

She had lost one class of energies. Macaulay

As soon as we employ a name to connote attributes, the things, be they more or fewer, which happen to possess those attributes, are constituted ipso facto a class. J. S. Mill.

6. Bot. & Zoöl. A comprehensive group of animals or plants, forming a category ranking above an order and below a phylum. (See CLASSIFICATION.) In the Linnæan system it was the highest category. Modern zoölogists have greatly increased the number of classes of animals, more than fifty being sometimes recognized. The mammals, birds, reptiles, and amphibians are examples of groups universally recognized as classes. The angiosperms and gymnosperms are the two classes of seed plants.

7. A division, grouping, or distinction, as of goods or of accommodation on a steamer or railroad train, based upon grade or quality; as, goods of the first or second class; to travel first class.

clas'si-cism (klăs'ĭ-sĭz'm), n. 1. Classic principles in literature or art; conformity to, or practice of, classical style; classicalism. C. Kingsley.

2. A classical idiom or expression.

3. Classical scholarship; classicality. As a critical term classicism denotes primarily the principles and characteristics of Greek and Roman literature and art, considered as embodying formal elegance, simplicity, dignity, and correctness of style, and just and lucid conception and order. It is thus contrasted with Gothicism (which see). Classicism is often used of the principles and qualities of other than Greek and Roman works, esp. when similar in spirit and established as a formal standard. Thus it delights those of musical works of the school of composers who have cultivated formal beauty or the qualities of clearness, symmetry, finish, and repose. As contrasted with romanticism (which see), in later critical discussions, it esp. typifies, in the better sense, pure taste, sobriety, and proportion, and in a less favorable sense the restraints of academic or conventional formality. Cf. HELLENISM.

clas'si-fi-ca'tion (klăs'ĭ-fĭ-kā'shŭn), n. [Cf. F. classification.] 1. Act of classifying, or systematically forming into a class or classes; act of distributing into groups, as classes, orders, families, etc.; act of referring to a proper class or of arranging in classes.

It is usual to treat of classification as one special form, among others of logical thought. I am unable to regard it in this light. It appears to me to be merely an external consequence, reappearing in every kind of universal, of the relation between universal and differences B. Bosanquet.

2. The result of classifying; a system of classes or groups, or a systematic division of a series of related phenomena; as, poetry, painting, sculpture, music, and architecture form a classification of the fine arts.

3. Biol. The systematic arrangement or method of arrangement of animals and plants in groups or categories according to some definite plan or sequence; taxonomy. The categories (see CATEGORY) now in common use in botany and zoology are (beginning with the highest) the phylum, class, order, family, genus, species, and subspecies, or variety. Each species belongs to some genus, which may or may not include also other species, all agreeing in certain features characteristic of that genus. Each genus in turn is a member of a family distinguished by possessing in common certain family characters; each family, of an order, and so on. Categories of intermediate rank are also employed, and are named by adding the prefixes sub- and super- to the categories immediately below and above, as subgenus, superfamily. (See NOMENCLATURE.) In classifying animals the attempt has usually been made to take into account all characters as far as practicable, and since the acceptance of the doctrine of evolution, to show their natural relationships and lines of descent from common ancestors (see ANIMAL). In plants the so-called artificial system of Linnæus, in which one or two characters formed the basis of comparison, was employed until superseded by the various natural systems proposed by later authors (see PLANT). Several systems slightly different from those above named are now in use among botanists, but the tendency is toward conformity with zoological usage.

clas'si-fi-ca'to-ry (klăs'ĭ-fĭ-kā'tō-rĭ; klă-sĭf'ĭ-ka-tō-rĭ), a. Pert. to, or involving, classification, tending or designed to classify; taxonomic.

classificatory system, Anthropol., a primitive system of reckoning kinship, found among American Indians, Australasians, etc., according to which, in its simplest form, all the members of any single generation in a given line of descent (as in a clan) are reckoned as of the same degree of kinship to all the members of any other generation, with reference to whom they are called by the same title of kinship. This system is contrasted with the descriptive system, in vogue among civilized peoples, which discriminates degrees of individual kinship in each generation. Cf GANOWANIAN.

classified civil service, in the departments of the United States government, the service in which the clerks are divided into four classes, according to salary, under Act of March 3, 1853, and subsequent acts. close; cf. clef.] 1. Anat. & Zoöl. A bone of the shoulder girdle. It is called in man the collar bone, and is joined at one end to the scapula, or shoulder blade, and at the other to the sternum, or breast bone In man each clavicle is shaped like the letter f, and is situated just above the first rib on either side of the neck. It makes the only bony connection between the arm bones and those of the trunk. In many mammals, as the ungulates and Carnivora, it is rudimentary or wanting entirely. In birds the two clavicles are commonly united ventrally, forming the merrythought, or wishbone. The clavicle of the lower vertebrates develops entirely in membrane, in close connection with the precoracoid part of the pectoral arch. In teleost fishes a large crescent-shaped bone is regarded as representing the clavicle.

clay (klā), n. [AS. clǣg ; akin to LG. klei, D. klei, and perh. to AS. clām clay, L. glus, gluten, glue, Gr. γλοιός glutinous substance, E glue.] 1. A widely distributed earth, plastic and tenacious when moist and hardening when baked, consisting of pure kaolin or, more commonly, of a mixture of kaolin with more or less of finely eroded material, chiefly quartz, feldspar, and mica. It is the result of the decomposition of granite and similar rocks. Dry clay consists essentially of a compound of alumina, silica, and the elements of water. When it is subjected to a baking heat water is formed and passes off as steam, and a material quite different from the original clay is left behind. It is very hard, and its powder, mixed with water, is not plastic. Change of color may also take place, as the reddening of some clays, due to oxidation of iron compounds contained in them. The peculiar property which clay possesses of being easily molded while moist, together with that of hardening on being baked, is the foundation of the pottery and brick industries. Kaolin is the purest form of clay, and is used not only for the manufacture of porcelain, but also as a source of the metal aluminium.

cleav'age(-ĕj), n. 1. A cleaving, or splitting; state of being cleft; division; as, the cleavage of society into classes.

2. Cryst. Quality possessed by many crystallized substances of splitting readily in one or more definite directions, and yielding more or less smooth surfaces always parallel to actual or possible crystal faces. It is due to a minimum value of cohesion in the direction of easy separation, — that is, at right angles to the cleavage plane itself. Also, the direction of the dividing plane Cf. PARTING.

3. Geol. The structure possessed by rock by virtue of which it breaks more readily and more persistently in one direction, or in certain directions, than in others. Even in stratified rock, the planes of cleavage are not necessarily parallel to the planes of stratification. Certain types of cleavage, such as slaty cleavage and schistose cleavage, are the result of pressure at right angles to the planes of cleavage. See SLATE, SCHIST.

4. Chem. The splitting of a molecule into simpler molecules; as, hydrolytic cleavage.

5. Biol. Cell division; specif.: Embryol. a The series of mitotic divisions of the egg which results in the formation of the blastomeres and changes the single-celled egg into a multicellular embryo; segmentation. b Any mitotic division belonging to that series. Cleavage follows the maturation and fertilization of the egg. It is called total if the whole egg divides into distinctly separate, though coherent, blastomeres or cells; regular, or equal, if the resulting blastomeres are of approximately the same size; and unequal if they differ in size. It is called partial if the division into blastomeres involves only a part of the egg, the rest remaining for a longer or shorter time undivided. Partial cleavage is discoidal if the blastomeres are formed at and about one pole of the egg; superficial, if an outer layer of cells is formed inclosing the undivided mass. There is usually a tendency for the plane of cleavage of a blastomere to be as nearly as possible at right angles to the plane of the preceding cleavage. See OVUM.

6. A fragment, as of a diamond, obtained by cleavage.

cleavage nucleus. Embryol. The nucleus of the fertilized egg, formed by the union of male and female pronuclei; the segmentation nucleus.

cleave (klēv), v. i.; pret. CLEAVED (klēvd), Archaic CLAVE (klāv); p. p. CLEAVED; p. pr. & vb. n. CLEAV'ING. clef (klĕf), n. [F. clef key, a key in music, fr. L. clavis key. See CLAVICLE.] Music. A character used in musical notation to determine the position and pitch of the scale as represented on the staff. The clefs are three in number, called the C, F, and G clefs, and are corruptions or modifications of these letters. They indicate that the absolute pitch belonging to the lines upon which they are placed is respectively that of middle C, the F next below, and the G next above. See PITCH. The F or bass clef and the G or treble clef are fixed in their positions upon the staff, the F clef on the fourth line, and the G clef on the second. The C clef may have three positions: (1) upon the first or lower line of the staff, then called soprano clef, (2) upon the third line, then called alto clef, or (3) upon the fourth line, then called tenor clef. It rarely or never is placed upon the second line, except in ancient music. Other forms of the F clef are 𝄢 and 𝄢, and of the C clef 𝄡 and 𝄡.

Clef. Each clef is supposed to govern the staff of five solid lines connected by the bar which precedes the clef.

7. To foreclose. Local, U. S.
Syn. — CLOSE, END, CONCLUDE, FINISH, COMPLETE, TERMINATE may be used, with the exception of complete, both transitively and intransitively. CLOSE usually has latent in it the idea of action upon that which may be regarded as in some sense open (see SHUT); as, to close an account, a debate; "As many lines close in the dial's center" (Shak.); "Recall those nights that closed thy toilsome days" (Pope); "Over! the sweet summer closes" (Tennyson). END conveys a stronger sense of finality; it frequently has implicit reference to a progress or development which is thought of as having been carried through; as, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved" (Jer. viii. 20); "If you are going to make a book end badly, it must end badly from the beginning" (Stevenson); "All 's well that ends well" (Shak.). CONCLUDE (cf. etym. with that of close) is a more formal term, and applies particularly to transactions, proceedings, or somewhat methodical writings; as, "I shall conclude this essay upon laughter with observing that the metaphor of laughing . . . runs through all languages" (Spectator). FINISH implies that what one set out to do is done; often, therefore, it denotes the completion of the final act in a process of elaboration (the "last" or "finishing touch"); as, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do" (John xvii. 4); "It wants but seventeen lines of having an end, I don't say of being finished" (Gray); "The last entire finishing and consummation of a good habit" (Spectator). COMPLETE implies the removal of all deficiencies; as, "When Blondel paused about the middle, the king began the remainder, and completed it" (T. Warton). TERMINATE implies the setting of a limit in time or space; as, "Ben Lomond terminates the view" (D. Wordsworth); "My philosophic walks were soon terminated by a shady bench" (Gibbon); a termination of hostilities was agreed on. See CEASE, WHOLE, EFFECT, LAST, TERMINATION.
to close a rivet, Mech., to hammer or press it when in position so as to form a head on its taper end and thus securely connect the parts intended to be joined. — to c. out, to sell off; to dispose of.

co-ad'u-na'tion (-nā'shŭn), n. [L. coadunatio] Union, as in one body or mass; unity. — co-ad'u-na-tive (kō-ăd'ū-nā-tĭv), a. — co-ad'u-na-tive-ly, adv.
The coadunation of all the civilized provinces. Coleridge co'ad-ven'ture (kō'ăd-vĕn'tūr), v. t. To adventure jointly — co'ad-ven'ture, n. — co'ad-ven'tur-er (-ẽr), n.
co'ag-ment' (kō'ăg-mĕnt'), v. t. [L. coagmentare, fr coagmentum a joining together. Cf. COGENT.] To join or stick together.
co-ag'u-la-ble (kō-ăg'ū-lă-b'l), a. Capable of being coagulated. — co-ag'u-la-bil'i-ty (-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), a.
co-ag'u-lant (kō-ăg'ū-lănt), n. [L. coagulans, p. pr.] That which produces coagulation.
co-ag'u-late (-lāt), v. t.; CO-AG'U-LAT'ED (-lāt'ĕd); CO-AG'U-LAT'ING (-lāt'ĭng). [L. coagulatus, p. p. of coagulare to coagulate, fr. coagulum means of coagulation, fr. cogere, coactum, to drive together, coagulate. See COGENT.] 1. To effect the coagulation of; curdle; clot; congeal; as, rennet coagulates milk; heat coagulates the white of an egg.
2. To form into a compact or dense mass; solidify.
coagulated proteid. Physiol. Chem., any of a class of proteids, as fibrin, formed by coagulation.
co-ag'u-late, v. i To undergo coagulation.
co-ag'u-la'tion (-lā'shŭn), n. [L. coagulatio ; cf. F. coagulation] 1. Action of coagulating, or state of being coagulated; esp., the change from a liquid to a thickened, curdlike state, not by evaporation, but by chemical reaction; as, the spontaneous coagulation of freshly drawn blood; the coagulation of milk by rennet, or acid, and the coagulation of egg albumin by heat; also, the reaction itself, consisting in the change of a soluble substance (usually albuminous) into an insoluble form.
2. The substance or body formed by coagulation.
co-ag'u-la-tive (kō-ăg'ū-lā-tĭv), a. Having the power to cause coagulation or the property of coagulating.
co-ag'u-la'tor (-lā'tẽr), n. That which causes coagulation. — co-ag'u-la-to-ry (-lă-tō-rĭ), a.
co-ag'u-lin (-lĭn), n Physiol. Chem. Any of a class of substances developed in animal organisms by the injection of bacterial cultures and possessing the property of coagulating albuminous substances.
co-ag'u-lum (-lŭm), n.; pl. -LA (-lă). [L. See COAGULATE.]
1. = COAGULANT. Obs.
2. A coagulated mass or substance.
co'ai-ta' (kō'ĭ-tă'; kō-ĭ'tă), n. [From native name: cf. Pg. coatá.] Any of various spider monkeys; esp, Ateles paniscus.
coak (kōk), n. [Of uncertain origin; cf. cock to secure by means of a cog hold.] 1. Carp. a A kind of tenon or projection connecting the face of a scarfed timber with the similarly scarfed face of another timber. See SCARF, Illust. b A dowel or pin of hard wood or metal let into timbers to unite them or keep them from slipping. Cf. COG.
2. A metallic bushing or strengthening piece in the center of a wooden block sheave.
coak, v. t.; COAKED (kōkt); COAK'ING. Carp. To fasten or unite by a coak or coaks. coal (kōl), n. [ME. col, cole, AS. col ; akin to D. kool, OHG. chol, cholo, G kohle, Icel. kol, pl., Sw. kol, Dan. kul ; cf. Skr. jval to burn. Cf. KILN, COLLIER.] 1. A piece of glowing carbon or a thoroughly charred fragment of wood or other combustible substance; an ember or a cinder.
2. = CHARCOAL.
3. A black, or brownish black, solid, combustible mineral substance formed by the partial decomposition of vegetable matter without free access of air, under the influence of moisture and, in many cases, of increased pressure and temperature. A complete series can be traced from the cellulose of wood through lignite, or brown coal, and soft, or bituminous, coal, to hard coal, or anthracite, or, as a final product, to graphite. The order given is one of decreasing volatility and increasing carbon content. Besides carbon, coal contains hydrogen, oxygen, nitrogen, and sulphur, and also inorganic constituents, which last are left behind as ash when the coal burns. The largest deposits of coal belong to the Carboniferous system, but the coal of the Cretaceous system (Laramie series) is also very extensive. In the United States anthracite coal is sorted in certain sizes (except the largest, steamboat, consisting of large lumps) by sieves of different-sized mesh, as follows:

Name of size.	Will pass through	Will not pass through Broken, or grate.	4.00 m. mesh	2.50 m. mesh
Egg..	2.50 " "	1.75 " "
Stove.	1.75 " "	1.25 " "
Chestnut, or nut .	...1.25 " "	.75 " "
Pea...	.75 " "	.50 " "
Buckwheat..	.50 " "	.25 " "

Finer sizes known locally as rice, flaxseed, mustard seed, etc., are also separated.
4. The charred residue of distillation left in a retort.
coal, v. t. ; COALED (kōld) ; COAL'ING. 1. To burn to charcoal ; to char.
Charcoal of roots, coaled into great pieces. Bacon.
2. To mark or delineate with charcoal. Obs. Camden.
3. To supply with coal ; as, to coal a steamer.
coal (kōl), v. i. To take in coal ; as, the steamer coaled.
coal bed. Geol. A layer or stratum of coal.
coal'-black', a. As black as coal ; jet black.
coal blacking. Iron founders' blacking, made from ground coal.
coal breaker. An apparatus or plant for crushing, cleansing, and assorting coal.
coal'er (kōl'ẽr), n. Anything wholly or chiefly employed in transporting or supplying coal, as a railway from coal-mining regions; also, a person employed in coaling vessels.
co'a-lesce' (kō'ă-lĕs'), v. i.; CO'A-LESCED' (-lĕst'); CO'A-LESC'ING (-lĕs'ĭng). [L. coalescere, coalitum ; co- + alescere to grow up, incho. fr. alere to nourish. See ALIMENT, n.] 1. To grow together ; to unite by growth into one body; as, the parts separated by a wound coalesce.
2. To unite in one body or product; to combine into one body or community ; as, vapors coalesce.
Certain combinations of ideas that, once coalescing, could not be shaken loose. De Quincey
Syn. — See MINGLE.
co'a-les'cence (-ĕns), n. Act or state of growing together, or of uniting by natural affinity or attraction ; concretion.
co'a-les'cent (-ĕnt), a. [L. coalescens, p. pr.] Growing together; cohering ; coalescing.
coal field Geol. A region in which deposits of coal occur; —called a coal basin when of basinlike structure. See BASIN, 8.
coal'fish' (kōl'fĭsh'), n. [From its dark back.] a A fish (Pollachius carbonarius) of the cod family found on the coasts of Europe and North America; — called also pollack. It becomes more than three feet long and is a food fish. See POLLACK b The beshow. c The sergeant fish.
coal gas. Gas made from coal ; specif., that made by distilling bituminous coal in retorts and used for lighting and heating. It consists chiefly of hydrogen (about one half) and methane (about one third), with small amounts of carbon monoxide, nitrogen, ethylene, etc. See GAS.
coal'hole' (kōl'hōl'), n. A hole for coal, as a trap or opening in a sidewalk, or, Eng., a compartment for storing coal in a building or vessel.
coal'ing sta'tion. A port at which vessels may coal ; esp., a port where supplies of coal are kept for a navy.
co'a-lite (kō'ă-lit), v. i. & t. [L. coalitus, p. p. of coalescere. See COALESCE.] To unite or coalesce. Rare.
Time has by degrees blended . . . and coalited the conquered with the conquerors Burke.
co'a-lite, a. [See COALESCE, v.] Coalesced.
co'a-li'tion (-lĭsh'ŭn), n. [LL. coalitio : cf. F. coalition. See COALESCE.] 1. Act of coalescing ; union into a body or mass, as of separate bodies or parts.
2. A combination or union ; specif., a temporary alliance of persons, parties, or states, for a joint action or purpose.
A coalition of the puritan and the blackleg. J Randolph.
Syn. — Combination, conjunction, fusion, league, confederacy, conspiracy. See ALLIANCE.
co'a-li'tion-al (-ŭl), a. Of or pertaining to coalition.
co'a-li'tion-ist, n. One who joins, aids, or favors a coalition.
co'a-lize (kō'ă-līz), v. t.; CO'A-LIZED (-līzd) ; CO'A-LIZ'ING (-līz'ĭng). [Cf. F. coaliser.] To enter into, or form, a coalition. — co'a-liz'er (-līz'ẽr), n.
coal measures. Geol. Strata of coal with the attendant rocks ; specif., a series of the Carboniferous system including the larger part of the workable coal beds of the world. See GEOLOGY, PENNSYLVANIAN. In the eastern United States they vary in thickness from a few feet up to 3,000 feet and consist of shales, sandstones, limestones, and conglomerates, with interstratified beds of coal and of iron ore.
coal oil. Petroleum, or a refined oil prepared from it; specif., kerosene.
coal pipe. Mining. a A very thin and irregular seam of coal. b A fossil tree trunk ; — so called in English coal fields.
coal'pit' (kōl'pĭt'), n. a A place where charcoal is made. Obs. or U. S. b A pit where coal is dug.
coal plant. Paleobot. One of the remains or impressions of plants found in the coal measures.
coal'sack' (kōl'săk'), n. [coal + sack a bag.] Astron. Any of the spaces in the Milky Way which are very black, owing to nearly complete absence of stars ; esp. [cap.], the large space near the Southern Cross sometimes called the Black Magellanic Cloud.
coal tar. Tar obtained by the distillation of bituminous coal, as in the manufacture of coal gas. It is a complex mixture of hydrocarbons and other substances. Among its important ingredients are benzene, aniline, phenol, naphthalene, anthracene, etc., which are respectively typical of many dyestuffs (as the aniline dyes, the phthaleins, indigo, alizarin), flavoring extracts, drugs, etc., whose artificial production is a matter of great commercial importance.
coal-tar color or colour, Chem., any one of a class of dyestuffs derived from coal tar. See COAL TAR. — coal-tar creosote, a colorless or yellow oily liquid, obtained in the distillation of coal tar, and resembling wood-tar oil, or creosote proper, but containing a much larger proportion of carbolic acid.
coal titmouse. Also coal'tit' (kōl'tĭt'), n. A small European titmouse (Parus ater) ; — so named from the black markings on its head and throat.
co—al'ti-tude (kō-ăl'tĭ-tūd), n. Astron. & Navig. The complement of the altitude ; the zenith distance.
coal'-whip'per, n. A laborer or a machine that raises coal out of the hold of a ship. Eng. — coal'-whip'ping, vb. n.
coal'y (kōl'ĭ), a. [From COAL, n.] Pertaining to, or resembling, coal ; containing coal ; of the nature of coal.
coam'ing (kōm'ĭng), n. [Of uncertain origin.] 1. A raised frame around a floor or roof opening, esp. a scuttle, to keep water from running in.

coarctate larva, Zoöl., the pseudopupa of a blister beetle. — c. pupa, Zoöl., a pupa closely covered by an oval case composed of the old larval skin, as in most Diptera.

co'arc-ta'tion (kō'ärk-tā'shŭn), n. [L. coarctatio.] 1. Confinement to a narrow space; compression; restriction Obs. 2. Med. A stricture or narrowing, as of a canal or orifice.

coarse (kōrs; 201), a.; COARS'ER (kōr'sẽr); COARS'EST. [From the noun COURSE; cf. of course in the common manner of proceeding, common, and hence, plain, rude, rough, gross. See COURSE.] 1. Common; of inferior quality or appearance; mean; hence, as applied to metals, unrefined.

I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are molded. Shak.

2. Large in bulk, or composed of large parts or particles; not fine in material or close in texture; gross, thick; rough; — opposed to fine; as, coarse sand; coarse thread, coarse cloth; coarse bread.

3. Harsh, rough, or rude, as opposed to delicate or dainty; as, coarse surroundings; unrefined; unpolished; as, coarse society; indelicate; vulgar; gross; as, coarse language.

To copy, in my coarse English, his beautiful expressions Dryden

4. Inclement; foul; — of the weather. Scot. & Dial. Eng.

5. Rough or raucous; — of sound, esp. of certain auscultatory sounds heard in pathological conditions of the chest.

Syn. — Broad, loose, low, offensive; vile, impure, unchaste, immodest, indecent, sensual, lewd. — COARSE, VULGAR, GROSS, OBSCENE, RIBALD come into comparison with reference to language or behavior. COARSE is opposed to fine, esp. with reference to fiber, texture, structure; as, "What is fine within thee growing coarse to sympathize with clay" (Tennyson). Coarse frequently implies lack of refinement or delicacy; as, "Whose laughs are hearty though his jests are coarse" (Pope). VULGAR, as here compared (see COMMON), is, except perhaps with respect to language, a stronger term; it suggests that which is offensive to good taste or decency, frequently with the added implication of boorishness or ill breeding; as, "Caliban is coarse enough, but surely he is not vulgar" (Hazlitt); "Burns is often coarse, but never vulgar" (Byron); "How finely is the true Shakespearean scene contrasted with Dryden's vulgar alteration of it . . . displaying nothing but indelicacy without passion" (Coleridge). GROSS (see RANK) is opposed to fine in the sense of delicate, subtle, ethereal; as, "Caliban . . . is all earth, all condensed and gross in feelings and images" (Coleridge); "It seemed to him that his body was in no way gross, but ethereal and perishable like a strain of music" (Stevenson). Gross frequently suggests the more animal or sensual qualities; as, "Belial . . . than whom a spirit more lewd fell not from heaven, nor more gross to love vice for itself" (Milton); "The grossness of his nature will have weight to drag thee down" (Tennyson). OBSCENE (see IMPROPER) stresses more strongly the idea of indecency or lewdness, RIBALD, of foulness of speech; as, an obscene allusion; "The jest unclean of linkboys vile, and watermen obscene" (Pope); a ribald song, jest. See CRUDE, ROUGH.

coarse file. See FILE, the instrument, 1. — c. fodder, any feeding stuff containing a relatively large percentage of crude fiber or water, as grass, hay, corn fodder, mangel-wurzels, etc.; — called also roughage. See CONCENTRATED FEED. — c. metal. Copper Metal. See METAL, n. — c. sight, Gun., disposition of the sight in firing so that a considerable portion of the front sight is seen above the rear-sight notch, — opposed to fine sight.

coast (kōst), n. [OF. coste, F. côte, rib, hill, shore, coast, L. costa rib, side. Cf. ACCOST, v. t., CUTLET.] 1. The side of a (human or animal) body; also, the side, or lengthwise edge or border, of anything. Obs. or Dial. Eng.

2. The seashore, or land near it; the seaboard or sea marge, that is, land immediately abutting the sea; as, they saw across the water the English coast; the littoral or coastal region; as, they are settled on the Pacific coast.

The term coasts includes the natural appendages of the territory which rise out of the water, although these islands are not of sufficient firmness to be inhabited or fortified; but it does not properly comprehend all the shoals which form sunken continuations of the land perpetually covered with water. The rule of law on this subject is terræ dominium ubi finitur armorum vis.
H. Wheaton.

3. The exterior line of a country; frontier border. Archaic.
From the river, the river Euphrates, even to the uttermost sea, shall your coast be. Deut. xi 24.

4. A tract, region, point of the compass. Obs. or Dial. U. S.

5. A declivity suited to coasting, as on a sled or bicycle; also, a slide or run down it.

co'balt (kō'bôlt; -bŏlt; 277), n. [G. kobalt, fr. kobold, kobel, goblin, MHG. kobolt; akin to G. koben pigsty, hut, AS. cofa room, cofgodas household gods, Icel. kofi hut. The ending -old perh. stands for older -walt, -wald (cf. WIELD), and the word would mean ruler or governor in a house, house spirit, the metal being so called by miners, because it was troublesome. Cf. KOBOLD, COVE.] A tough, lustrous, reddish white metal related to, and occurring with, iron and nickel. Symbol Co; at.wt., 58.97. Cobalt occurs native in meteoric iron and combined in smaltite, cobaltite, linnæite, erythrite, and other minerals. It was recognized as an element in 1735. The metal, which is isolated by reduction, as with carbon or aluminium, is somewhat magnetic. It melts at 1530° C. (2786° F.). Sp. gr., 8.5-8.9. It has been used instead of nickel in plating. See also SMALT. Like iron, cobalt forms two series of salts (cobaltous and cobaltic); it also forms many complex compounds. See COBALTAMMINE.

co'balt-am'mine (-ăm'ĭn; -ēn; 184), n. Also co'balt-am'ine. [cobalt + ammonia + -ine.] Chem. Any of a large number of complex compounds of cobalt formed by combination of cobalt salts with ammonia. These compounds do not as a rule yield the ions of the simple salts. They have been arranged into several series, some of which have been named from the colors of their members. See CROCEO-, FUSCO-, PRASEO-, ROSEO-, XANTHO-.

cobalt blue. A dark blue pigment consisting of some compound of cobalt, as the phosphate, ignited with alumina; — called also cobalt ultramarine. It is permanent and works well in all mediums.

cobalt bronze. 1. A violet-colored compound of bronze-like luster. It is cobaltous ammonium phosphate. 2. An alloy of cobalt, copper, and aluminium, in the proportions 5 : 4 : 1.

cobalt crust. Earthy arsenate of cobalt.

cobalt green. A compound of the oxides of cobalt and zinc, used as a green pigment of superior merit.

co-bal'ti- (kō-bôl'tĭ-). Combining form for cobaltic.

co-bal'tic (-tĭk), a. Chem. Pertaining to, derived from, or containing, cobalt; — said esp. of compounds in which it is trivalent.

co-bal'ti-cy-an'ic (-tĭ-sī-ăn'ĭk), a. [cobalti- + cyanic.] Chem. Pertaining to or designating a colorless crystalline acid, $H_3Co(CN)_6 \cdot xH_2O$. Its salts, called co-bal'ti-cy'anides (-sī'ă-nīdz; -nĭdz; 184), are formed from colbaltocyanides by oxidation.

co'balt-ite (kō'bôlt-īt; kō'bŏlt-), co'balt-ine (-ĭn; -ēn), n. Min. Sulpharsenide of cobalt, CoAsS, nearly silver-white to grayish in color, and occurring in isometric crystals or massive. H., 5 5. Sp. gr., 6.0-6.3. It is used in the manufacture of smalt.

co-bal'to- (kŏ-bôl'tō-). Combining form for cobaltous.

co-bal'tous (kō-bôl'tŭs; kō'bôl-tŭs; kō'bŏl-; 277), a. Chem. Pertaining to, derived from, or containing, cobalt; — said esp. of cobalt compounds in which the metal is bivalent. cobaltous chloride, a compound, $CoCl_2$, crystallizing with six molecules of water, of a pale rose color when hydrous, blue when dehydrated. Its solution is used for a sympathetic ink. — c. hydroxide, a compound, $Co(OH)_2$, obtained as a pale red precipitate by the addition of alkalies to solutions of cobaltous salts. — c. sulphate, a compound, $CoSO_4$, crystallizing in pale red monoclinic prisms containing seven molecules of water. It occurs native as bieberite.

cobalt speiss. Speiss obtained in smelting cobalt ores. It is arsenide of nickel, with some cobalt and iron.

cob'ble (kŏb''l), n. [From COB a lump. See COB, n., 4; cf. COPPLE, COPPLESTONE.] 1. A cobblestone.

2. pl. Cob coal.

cob'ble, v. t.; COB'BLED (-'ld); COB'BLING (-lĭng). [Orig. uncert.] 1. To make or mend coarsely; to patch; botch; as, to cobble shoes. Shak. "A cobbled saddle." Thackeray. 2. To make clumsily. "Cobbled rimes." Dryden.

coch'i-neal (kŏch'ĭ-nēl; 277), n. [F. cochenille, Sp. cochinilla, dim. from L. coccineus, coccinus, scarlet, fr. coccum the kermes berry, Gr. κόκκος berry, esp. the kermes insect, used to dye scarlet, as cochineal was formerly supposed to be the grain or seed of a plant, and defined as the grain of Quercus coccifera.] A dyestuff consisting of the dried bodies of females of the Coccus cacti, an insect native in Mexico, Central America, etc., and found on several species of cactus, esp. Nopalea coccinellifera. These cacti are extensively cultivated as food for the insects, which are gathered and killed by heat. When killed in stoves, the natural white powdery covering of the insect is retained, and silver-grey cochineal results; when killed by steam or hot water, they lose this covering, and black cochineal is produced. The cochineal of the shops is used for making carmine and also as a red dye, but artificial dyestuffs have largely displaced it.

cochineal fig. A cactaceous plant (Nopalea coccinellifera) of Central and South America, widely cultivated in the tropics for the sake of the cochineal insect, which lives on it.

coch'le-a (kŏk'lē-ä), n.; L. pl. -LEÆ (-ē). [L., a snail, or snail shell, Gr. κοχλίας a snail, fr. κόχλος a shellfish with a spiral shell.] 1. A winding stair. Obs. or R.

2. a = SCREW, n., 1. Obs. b An Archimedean screw. Obs.

3. Anat. A division of the labyrinth of the ear, wanting or rudimentary in the lower vertebrates, but well developed in birds and mammals, and in all the latter except the monotremes coiled into the form of a snail shell. See EAR. In man the cochlea consists of a spiral canal in the petrous part of the temporal bone, in which lies a smaller membranous spiral passage, communicating with the sacculus at the base of the spiral and ending blindly near its apex. It is called the scala media or ductus cochlearis, and contains the organ of Corti (which see). The scala media, together with an osseous lamina (the lamina spiralis), divides the bony canal into an upper and a lower passage, the former (the scala vestibuli) communicating with the vestibule, the latter (the scala tympani) ending blindly at the fenestra rotunda. Both contain perilymph and communicate at the apex of the cochlea.

4. Bot. A spirally coiled body or organ; specif., a coiled legume, as that of alfalfa.

coch'le-ar (-ăr), a. Anat. Of or pertaining to the cochlea.

coch'le-ar, a. [See COCHLEARE.] Spoon-shaped.

cochlear æstivation, Bot, æstivation in which one large hollowed petal covers all the others, as in aconite.

coch'le-a're (-ăr'rē; -ăr'ē), n. [L., a spoon.] Med. A spoonful; — used in prescriptions, and abbr. cochl. or coch. See MEASURE, Table.

coch'le-ar'i- (kŏk'lē-ăr'ĭ-; -ăr'ĭ'-). Combining form from Latin cochleare, meaning spoon; as in: coch'le-ar'i-fo'li-ate, having a spoon-shaped leaf, etc.

Coch'le-a'ri-a (-ā'rĭ-ä; -ăr'ĭ-ä), n. [NL., from the cochlear æstivation.] Bot. A genus of brassicaceous fleshy maritime herbs bearing globose pods. They are natives of the colder parts of the north temperate zone. Some species are called scurvy grass.

coch'le-ar'i-form (-ăr'ĭ-fôrm; -ăr-), a. [cochleare + -form.] Spoon-shaped.— cochleariform process, Anat., the thin plate of bone between the Eustachian tube and the canal for the tensor tympani muscle.

coch'le-ate (kŏk'lē-āt) } a. [L. cochleatus spiral or screwcoch'le-at'ed (-āt'ĕd) } formed. See COCHLEA.] Having the form of a snail shell; turbinated

coch-le'i-form (kŏk-lē'ĭ-fôrm), a. [See COCHLEA; -FORM.] a Shaped like a snail shell. b [Erroneously] Cochleariform.

Coch'li-di'i-dæ (kŏk'lĭ-dĭ'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.; Gr. κοχλίς, pl. κοχλίδες, a small snail + -idæ.] Zoöl. A large and widely distributed family of moths of medium or small size and usually attractive coloration. The caterpillars are slug-like, often flattened, and sometimes armed with venomous spines. The egg-shaped or nearly spherical cocoon is formed of brown silk and is dense and firm.

Coch'lo-sper-ma'ce-æ (kŏk'lō-spûr-mā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.; Gr. κόχλος spiral shell + σπέρμα seed; — referring to the coiled embryo.] Bot. A family of plants (order Hypericales), containing 3 genera and about 18 species, natives of tropical or subtropical regions. They are trees, shrubs, or herbs with palmate leaves and large flowers; the seeds are invested with a silky down. The genus Amoreuxia is found in the southwestern United States. — coch'lo-sper-ma'ceous (-shŭs), a.

cock (kŏk), n. [Cf. Icel. kökkr lump, Dan. kok heap.] A small conical pile of hay, or of dung, wood, turf, etc.

cod, n. [Of uncertain origin.] A soft-finned fish (Gadus callarias) of the colder parts of the North Atlantic, one of the most important food fishes of the world. A very closely allied species, the Alaska cod (G. macrocephalus), inhabits the North Pacific. The usual weight of the cod is about 10 pounds, but individuals of 75 pounds or more are sometimes taken. It is olivaceous above, and lighter below, with a conspicuous whitish lateral line. It is usually taken with hand or trawl lines in water from 20 to 40 fathoms deep. The most extensive fisheries are those of the Banks of Newfoundland, but those of the New England and Norwegian coasts are also important. Fishermen on the New England coast distinguish: Bank cod, those from the Banks of Newfoundland; shore, or native, cod, those from near their own shores; rock cod, those which live among rocky ledges, and are often spotted with red, etc. These are, however, all of the same species. The name cod is also applied as a general name to fish of the family Gadidæ (which see), of which the cod is the type, and is applied to various other fishes of different countries. In Australia it is given to Lotella callarias of the Gadidæ, and to several serranoid fishes (see MURRAY COD); in New Zealand to Polyprion prognathus of the Serranidæ, and others. See also TOMCOD, BUFFALO COD, ROCK COD, RED COD, etc.

Law.* a Any of the various systematic collections of laws made during the later empire, esp. of those made under the emperors and published with statutory force. These codes are the Gregorian, Hermogenian, Theodosian, and the Corpus Juris Civilis (see these terms). b By way of eminence, "The Code," the Justinian code.

2. Any systematic body of law, esp. one given statutory force; a compilation of laws by public authority; a digest. Such codes exist regularly in the states of the continent of Europe and of Latin America; and the laws of England and many of the States of the United States have been, or are being, codified. The general plan is to make five codes: a civil code for the law of persons, property, obligations, etc.; a commercial code; a criminal, or penal, code; and codes of civil and criminal procedure. Various codes of historical importance are the Amalfitan Code, Consolato del Mare, Draconian Code, Laws of Oléron, Laws of Wisby, Laws of Manu, Code Napoléon, etc. See these terms

3. Med. A collection of medical formulas; specif., the French pharmacopœia.

cod'fish' (kŏd'fĭsh'), n. The cod. See 3d COD.

cod'fish'er (-ẽr), n. A person or vessel engaged in fishing for cod. — cod'fish'er-y (-ĭ), n.; pl. -FISHERIES (-ĭz).

codg'er (kŏj'ẽr), n. [Cf. CADGER.] 1. A miser or mean person, esp. an old one. Dial. Eng.

2. A singular or odd person; a fellow; — a familiar, jocose, or depreciatory appellation. Collog.

Co'di-a'ce-æ (kō'dĭ-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. See CODIUM.] Bot. A small family of marine algæ typifying the order Codiales. — co'di-a'ceous (-shŭs), a.

Co'di-a'les (-ā'lēz), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. A large order of green algæ (Chlorophyceæ) distinguished from all other seaweeds by having a complicated, often highly differentiated, thallus consisting of a single large multinucleate cell or cœnocyte. See CAULERPA, VAUCHERIA.

cod'i-cil (kŏd'ĭ-sĭl), n. [L. codicillus, dim. of codex: cf. F. codicille.] 1. Law. a An instrument made subsequently to a will and modifying it in some respects. A codicil must be executed in the same manner as the will itself, and forms a part of it, superseding it so far as inconsistent with it. There may be any number of codicils. b In the Roman, Canon, and early English law, a kind of informal will made without the appointment of executors, which was said to be essential to a valid will.

2. A tablet for writing, or the letter thereon written; an account book; a diploma. Obs.

cod'i-cil'la-ry (-sĭl'ā-rĭ), a. [L. codicillaris, codicillarius.] Of the nature of, or belonging to, a codicil.

co'di-fi-ca'tion (kō'dĭ-fĭ-kā'shŭn; kŏd'ĭ-; 277), n. [Cf. F. codification.] Act, process, or result, of codifying, or reducing laws to a code.

co'di-fy (kō'dĭ-fī; kŏd'ĭ-fī; 277), v. t.; -FIED (-fīd); -FY'ING. [code + -fy: cf. F. codifier.] To reduce to a code, as laws.

co-dil'la (kō-dĭl'ā), n. [Cf. L. codicula, dim. of cauda tail.] Com. The coarse tow of flax and hemp; the waste of scutching, which is sorted out for rope making, etc.

co-dille' (kō-dĭl'), n. [F. codille, Sp. codillo.] A term at ombre, used when the game is lost by the one challenging.

co-din'i-ac (kō-dĭn'ĭ-ăk), n. [F. cotignac, formerly coudignac.] A marmalade or confection of quinces; quiddany.

Co'di-um (kō'dĭ-ŭm), n. [NL., fr. Gr. κώδεια head; — in reference to the large rounded thallus.] Bot. A genus of green algæ, type of the family Codiaceæ, having a thallus of interwoven filaments with branching club-shaped apexes.

cod line. An eighteen-thread line used in catching codfish.

cod'ling (kŏd'lĭng), n. [Dim. of cod the fish.] a A young cod. b Any of certain gadoid fishes constituting Physcis and allied genera. They are among those called hake.

cod'ling (-lĭng), cod'lin (-lĭn), n. [Of uncertain origin.] 1. a A small, immature apple; hence, an apple of inferior grade, used only for stewing. b A variety of apple elongated in shape, having a number of horticultural forms.

2. The tree which bears codlings. Eng.

codling, or codlin, moth. A small moth (Carpocapsa pomonella), which in the larval state (known as apple worm) lives in apples, pears, and quinces, often doing great damage.

Codling Moth. A Larva eating the interior of an apple; c Entrance to burrow; B C Adult moth, nat. size.

cod liver. The liver of the common cod and allied species.

cod'-liv'er oil, an oil obtained from the liver of the codfish and allied fishes and used extensively in medicine in cases of impaired assimilation and nutrition. Sp. gr., .915–.930.

co-dom'i-nant (kō-dŏm'ĭ-nănt), a. Forestry. Forming part of the main canopy of a forest, but not of the highest dimensions; — said of a tree or species. Cf. DOMINANT.

cod'piece' (kŏd'pēs'), n. [cod a bag + piece.] A flaplike or baglike appendage at the front of men's breeches as formerly made. It was often conspicuously ornamented, esp. in the 15th and 16th centuries.

cods'head' (kŏdz'hĕd'), n. 1. The head of a codfish; — written usually cod's head.

2. A dull or stupid fellow; a blockhead. "An all unutterable codshead." Scott. — cods'-head'ed, a. Obs.

co'ef-fi'cient, n. 1. That which unites in action with something else to produce an effect; a joint agent.

2. [Cf. F. coefficient.] Math. Any numeral or literal symbol or combination of symbols (generally constants) placed, generally, before another symbol or combination of symbols as a multiplier; thus, in $6x$, bx, $(a-c)x$, and $(au+bv-cw)$ $(x-y-z)$, the symbols 6, b, $a-c$, and $au+bv-cw$ are coefficients.

3. Physics. A number, commonly used in computation as a factor, expressing the amount of some change or effect under certain conditions as to temperature, length, volume, etc.; as, the coefficient of expansion, friction, etc.

4. Psychol. An essential peculiarity or distinguishing mark of a conscious state or character. J. M. Baldwin.

coefficient of contraction, Hydraul., the ratio of the cross-sectional area of the first vena contracta to the area of the discharging orifice or aperture. — c. of depression, Phys. Chem., the depression of the freezing point produced by the solution of one gram of a substance in 100 grams of solvent. — c. of discharge, Hydraul., the ratio of the actual discharge to the theoretical discharge assuming no coefficients of contraction and velocity. It is equal to the product of these coefficients. — c. of displacement. = BLOCK COEFFICIENT. — c. of efficiency. Mech. = EFFICIENCY, n., 2. — c. of efflux. = COEFFICIENT OF DISCHARGE. — c. of elasticity. See ELASTICITY. — c. of expansion, Physics, the ratio of the increase of length (linear coefficient), area (superficial), or volume (cubical) of a body for a given rise in temperature (usually from 0 to 1° C.) to the original length, area, or volume, respectively. These three coefficients are approximately in the ratio $1:2:3$. When not expressly specified, the cubical coefficient is usually intended. — c. of fineness, Mech., the ratio of an area or of a volume to the area of the circumscribed rectangle or the volume of the circumscribed rectangular parallelepiped, respectively. — c. of fineness of displacement. = BLOCK COEFFICIENT. — c. of friction, the ratio of the limiting friction between two surfaces to the perpendicular pressure between them. It is constant for the same pair of surfaces. — c. of homology, Math., the constant cross ratio of two corresponding points of two figures in homology, the intersection of their junction line with the axis of homology, and the center of homology; or, correlatively, of two corresponding rays, the junction ray of their intersection and the center of homology, and the axis of homology. — c. of hysteresis, Magnetism, the number of ergs of energy dissipated as heat in one cubic centimeter of iron, when the magnetization is carried through one cycle; hysteresis coefficient. See HYSTERESIS. — coefficients of inertia, Math., coefficients of the squared generalized components of velocity in the expression for the kinetic energy of a rigid system. They are in general functions of the generalized coördinates. coefficient of leakage, Elec., the ratio of total magnetic field or flux to useful flux. — c. of mobility, Math., Maxwell's term for the coefficients of the squared generalized component momenta in the expression for the kinetic energy of a rigid system subjected to given impulses. They depend on the configuration. — coefficient of molecular depression, the depression of the freezing point produced by the solution of one gram molecule of a substance in 100 grams of the solvent. — c. of Peltier effect, Elec., the number of ergs of heat energy evolved at the junction of two metals by the passage of one absolute unit of electricity. — c. of purity, Sugar Making, the ratio of sugar to total dissolved solids in plant juice. — c. of reduction, Ballistics, the product of the coefficients of tenuity, shape, and steadiness, which depend respectively on the tenuity of the medium, the shape of the projectile, and the accuracy of the centering. — c. of refraction. Physics. = INDEX OF REFRACTION. — c. of resistance, Hydraul., the ratio of the loss of head to the remaining head of a fluid discharging through an orifice or over a weir. — c. of restitution, Mech., the ratio of the relative velocity of two elastic bodies after rebounding to that before impact. — c. of rigidity, Mech., in a body subjected to stresses causing shear, the ratio of the stress intensity to the displacement per unit distance produced by this stress. — c. of safety. = FACTOR OF SAFETY. — c. of self, or mutual, induction. See INDUCTANCE. — c. of surface discharge, the ratio of the amount of water which flows off the surface of an area to the total precipitation. — c. of useful effect. = EFFICIENCY, n., 2. — c. of velocity, Hydraul., the ratio of the actual velocity to the theoretical velocity of a fluid jet discharging from an orifice or a weir.

coe'horn (kō'hôrn), n [From its inventor, Baron Coehorn.] Mil. A small bronze mortar for throwing light shell, mounted on a wooden block with handles, and light enough to be carried short distances by men.

Cœ'la-can'thi-dæ (sē'lā-kăn'thĭ-dē; sēl'ā-), n. pl. [NL.; Gr. κοίλος hollow + ἄκανθα thorn, spine.] Paleon. A family of extinct ganoid fishes with cycloid scales, no ossified vertebræ, the air bladder ossified, and a diphycercal tail ending in a supplementary fin. They are found from the Upper Devonian to the Upper Cretaceous. — cœ'la-canth (sē'lə-kănth; sēl'ə-), cœ'la-can'thid (-kăn'thĭd). a. & n. — cœ'la-can'thine (-thĭn; -thīn), a. — cœ'la-can'thoid (-thoid), a. & n. — cœ'la-can'thous (-thŭs), a.

cœ'lan-a-glyph'ic (sē'lăn-ə-glĭf'ĭk), a. [Gr. κοίλος hollow + anaglyphic.] Sculp. Designating hollow relief. See RELIEF.

-cœle (-sēl). [Gr. κοῖλον a hollow, or κοιλία belly, fr. κοῖλος hollow.] A suffix denoting cavity, ventricle, or chamber of the body; as, endocœle, mesocœle, schizocœle, etc.

Cœ'lebs (sē'lĕbz), n. [L. cælebs, unmarried, single.] In Hannah More's novel "Cœlebs in Search of a Wife" (1809), a young gentleman who sets out to find (and eventually finds) a wife meeting the somewhat exacting requirements of his dead mother. Cœlebs is sometimes applied to any bachelor seeking a wife, while Cœlebs's wife is used of a bachelor's ideal of a wife.

Cœ'lel-min'tha (sē'lĕl-mĭn'thə; sēl'ĕl-) } n. pl. [NL.
Cœ'lel-min'thes (sē'lĕl-mĭn'thēz, sēl'ĕl-) } See CŒLOM, HELMINTHES.] Zoöl. A group of worms nearly or exactly equivalent to Nematoda. — cœ'lel-minth (sē'lĕl-mĭnth; sēl'ĕl-), n. — cœ'lel-min'thic (-mĭn'thĭk), a.

Cœ-len'ter-a'ta (sē-lĕn'tĕr-ā'tə), n. pl. [NL. See CŒLENTERON.] Zoöl. A phylum of invertebrate, usually radially symmetrical, animals, including the corals, sea anemones, jellyfishes, and hydroids. They possess an internal digestive cavity (cœlenteron) which may be produced into tubular extensions, but there is no separate vascular system, and no perivisceral cavity. The body walls consist of two cellular layers, an ectoderm and an endoderm (the latter lining the cœlenteron), between which is a gelatinous layer, the mesoglœa, regarded as noncellular, any cells that it may contain being supposed to be derived from the other layers. The cœlenteron usually has a single opening or mouth surrounded by tentacles. Most of the Cœlenterata possess stinging cells, or nematocysts. Many reproduce by budding and form horny or calcareous skeletons. They are usually divided into the Hydrozoa, Scyphozoa, Actinozoa, and Ctenophora. In old classifications the sponges were included. — cœ-len'ter-ate (sē-lĕn'tĕr-āt), a. & n.

cœ-len'ter-on (-tĕr-ŏn), n.; pl. -TERA (-ə). [NL.; Gr. κοῖλος hollow + ἔντερον an intestine.] Zoöl. a The internal cavity of the Cœlenterata, which performs not only the functions of a digestive tract, but also those of the cœlom of higher animals. b The archenteron.

co-e'lho (kō-ā'lyō), n. [Pg., a kind of fish, a rabbit, L. cuniculus cony. Cf. CONY.] A large mackerel-like fish (Promethichthys prometheus) of the tropical Atlantic.

cœ'li-ac, cœ'li-ac (sē'lĭ-ăk), a. [L. coeliacus, Gr. κοιλιακός, fr. κοιλία belly, fr. κοῖλος hollow.] Pert. to the cavity of the abdomen. — cœliac artery, or c. axis, Anat., a short thick artery arising from the aorta just below the diaphragm. It divides almost immediately into the gastric, hepatic, and splenic branches. — c. flux, c. passion, Med., a chronic flux or diarrhea of undigested food. — c. plexus, a sympathetic nerve plexus round the cœliac axis.

cœ'li-o- (sē'lĭ-ō-), cœ'li-. Also ce'li-o-, ce'li-. Combining forms derived from Greek κοιλία, belly, abdomen; as in: cœ'li-al'gi-a (sē'lĭ-ăl'jĭ-ə; -jə), pain in the belly; cœ'li-o-myal'gi-a (-mī-ăl'jĭ-ə; -jə), pain in the abdominal muscles; cœ'li-or-rhœ'a or -rhe'a (-ō-rē'ə), diarrhea, etc.

cœ'lo-dont (-dŏnt), a. [cœlo- + -odont.] Zoöl. Hollow-toothed, as certain lizards. — n. A cœlodont animal.

Cœ-log'y-ne (sē-lŏj'ĭ-nē), n. [NL.; cœlo- + Gr. γυνή woman.] Bot. A large genus of tropical Asiatic epiphytic orchids having mostly yellow or white flowers with a membranaceous perianth, large cucullate labellum, and winged column. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

Cœ'lo-gas'tru-la (sē'lō-găs'troo-lə), n. [NL.; cœlo- + gastrula.] Biol. A typical gastrula derived from a cœloblastula.

Code' Noir' (nwar'). [F., black code.] A humane set of French laws regulating slavery in St. Domingo, made in 1685.

co'de-rive', v. t. & i. See CO-, 1. codes. † COADS.

co'de-scend'ant, n. See CO-, 3 a.

code State. Law. A State which has codified its laws of civil and criminal procedure. U. S.

codfish aristocracy. Orig., the aristocracy of the Massachusetts families enriched from the codfisheries; hence, social pretenders of recently acquired wealth; the nouveaux riches.

codg'er. Var. of COZIER.

Co'di-a'num (kō'dĭ-ā'nŭm), n. [NL., fr. Malabar kodi avanaku.] Syn. of PHYLLANTHUS.

cod'i-cal (kŏd'ĭ-kăl), a. Of or relating to a codex or code.

cod'i-cess, n., pl. of CODEX.

codlins and cream. Bot. = APPLE PIE, 2. Dial. Eng.

cod net. A net with a cod, or narrow closed end or bag.

co'dol (kō'dŏl; -dōl), n. = RETINOL. [CO-, 3 a.

co'do-mes'ti-ca'tion. n. See COco'don (kō'dŏn), n. [Gr. κώδων a bell.] a A small bell. b Bell or mouth of a trumpet.

cod'pitch'inga, n. pl. The lowest quality of cod-liver oil, obtained from the decomposing livers.

Cod'rus (kŏd'rŭs), n. [L., fr. Gr. Κόδρος.] The last king of Athens, who, according to tradition, reigned about 1068 B. C., and voluntarily sacrificed himself in battle against the Dorians when he learned that they had been told by an oracle that they would win if the killing of the Athenian king was avoided.

codsle. † CUTTLE.

cod'worm' (kŏd'wûrm'), n. [Cf. 1st COD, 2d CADDIS.] A caddis coe, or co, n. [ME. co, coe. Cf. CHOUGH.] A jackdaw Obs.

coe, n. [E. dial. also coath. AS. cōðu disease.] A disease of sheep; the rot — v. t. To infest with this disease. Local, Eng.

coe (kō), n. [Cf. D. kouw, prop cage; see also DECOY.] Mining. A small hut or shack built over a shaft not used for pumping or hoisting. Local, Eng.

cœc-. For forms in cœc- (as cœcal, cœcum, etc.), see those in CÆC-, as CÆCAL, CÆCUM, etc.

co'ef-fect', n. A concomitant effect. [See CO-, 3 a co-ef'fi-ca-cy (kō-ĕf'ĭ-kə-sĭ), n. | co'ef-fi'cien-cy (kō'ĕ-fĭsh'ĕn-sĭ), n. Joint efficiency.

coel- = CŒLO-.

Coel (kōl; kŏl), n. Celt. Myth. A Cymric god of war and the sky; — probably the original of "King Cole" of folklore.

co-eld'er, n. See CO-, 3 b. — co-eld'ership, n.

co'e-lec'tor, n See CO-, 3 b.

co'-e-lec'tron, n. See ELECTRON

Cœ-len'ter-a (sē-lĕn'tĕr-ə), n. pl. [NL.] = CŒLENTERATA.

cœ-lest', cœ-les'tial, cœl'es-tine, etc. Vars. of CELEST, etc.

cœ'les-tine (sē'lĕs-tĭn; sēl'ĕs-), n. Celestite cœ'li-a (sē'lĭ-ə), n. [NL., fr. Gr. κοιλια a cavity of the body.] Anat. A cavity, esp. of the brain.

cœ'li-an (-ăn), a. Also ce'li-an. Anat. Cœliac. Rare.

Cœ'li-an. Var. of CŒLIAN.

Cœ-lic'o-list (sē-lĭk'ō-lĭst), n. [L. caelicola, coelicola, a heaven worshiper.] Ch. Hist. One of an obscure heretical sect, the Cœ-lic'o-læ (-lē), of the 4th and 5th centuries, combining Jewish and Christian doctrines cœ-lig'e-nous (sē-lĭj'ē-nŭs), a. [L. caelum heaven + -genous.] Heaven-born. Rare.

cœ'line (sē'lĭn; -līn), n. [See CŒLIAC.] Cerulean. [Rare.]

cœ'line (sē'lĭn), a. Celestial.

cœ'li-ot'o-my, cœ'li-o-t'o-my (-ĭt'ō-mĭ), n [cœlio- + -tomy.] Laparotomy cœ'lo-blas'tu-la, n.; pl. -LÆ (-lē) [NL.; cœlo- + blastula.] A blastula with a blastocœle.

Cœ'lo-cos'cus (sē'lō-kŏk'ŭs), n. [NL.; cœlo- + Gr. κόκκος grain, seed.] Bot. A small genus of Polynesian pinnate-leaved palms, differing from Metroxylon chiefly by technical characters of the endosperm. C. amicorum, the ivory-nut palm of the Caroline Islands, yields a sago

cœ'lome (sē'lōm) } λωμα a hollow, fr. κοίλος hollow.]
Zoöl. The body cavity or perivisceral cavity of most Metazoa above the sponges and cœlenterates. It appears in the embryo at an early stage as a space or system of spaces in the mesoblast, sometimes derived from a part of the original enteron, in other cases appearing independently. It is usually lined by a distinct epithelium, and where well developed forms a large space between the alimentary viscera and the body walls. The body cavity of vertebrates (in mammals divided into two chief parts, thorax and abdomen) is a true cœlom. In many invertebrates the cœlom is more or less reduced or obliterated. This occurs in the arthropods, where the body cavity is not of the nature of a cœlom, but formed by the expansion of parts of the blood-vascular system. Such a body cavity is termed a hæmocœle. Cf. EXTRA-EMBRYONIC CŒLOM.

Cœ-lo'ma-ta (sē-lō'mă-tă), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. A group including all Metazoa except the sponges and cœlenterates; — so called because regarded as possessing a cœlom.

cœ-lo'mate (sē-lō'māt), a. Zoöl. Having a cœlom. — n. A cœlomate animal; one of the Cœlomata.

cœ'lo-sperm' (sē'lō-spûrm'), n. [cœlo- + -sperm.] Bot. A seedlike carpel of certain apiaceous plants, as coriander, having its hollow surface on the inner side; also, a plant bearing such fruit. — cœ'lo-sper'mous (sē'lō-spûr'mŭs), a.

cœ'lo-stat' (sē'lō-stăt'), n. [L. cælum heaven + Gr. στατός standing still.] Astron. An instrument consisting of an adjustable plane mirror clock-driven on an axis parallel to the axis of the earth, so as to provide a stationary reflected image of a heavenly body. It is generally used in connection with a telescope. Cf. HELIOSTAT.

co-emp'tion (kō-ĕmp'shŭn), n. [L. coëmptio, fr. coëmere to buy up. See EMPTION.] 1. Engrossing of commodities.

2. Rom. Law. A form of nominal purchase with five witnesses and the libripens as in the mancipatio. It was used only as a form of marriage (L. co-emp'ti-o ma'tri-mo'ni-i cau'sa [kō-ĕmp'shĭ-ō mā'trĭ-mō'nĭ-ī kô'zā]) which brought the wife into the manus of the husband, or as a formality (fiduciary coemption, or L. co-emp'ti-o fi-du'ci-æ cau'sa) [fĭ-dū'shĭ-ē] devised to enable her to substitute a fiduciary tutelage for a legal one.

co-emp'tor (-tôr), n. [L.] An engrosser of commodities.

Cof'fe-a (kŏf'ē-ă), n. [NL. See COFFEE.] Bot. A genus of rubiaceous shrubs of the Old World, chiefly African. Their flowers have a turbinate calyx and somewhat salver-shaped corolla. See COFFEE.

cof'fee (kŏf'ĭ; 205), n. [Turk. qahveh, Ar. qahwah wine, coffee, a decoction of berries. Cf. CAFÉ.] 1. A drink made by infusion or decoction from the roasted and ground or pounded seeds of Coffea arabica or other species of Coffea. In Sumatra the dried leaves are often so used. In moderate quantities it is to most persons a mild stimulant (see CAFFEINE). The use of coffee is said to have been introduced into Europe by A. Rauwolf, a German physician, about 1575.

2. The seeds obtained from the berry of various species of Coffea, esp. C. arabica. The ripe cherrylike fruit contains usually two seeds known as coffee beans or coffee nibs. The coffee of commerce is the prepared seed freed from the pulp, washed, dried in the sun, and hulled.

3. The shrub or small tree which yields coffee. It has white, fragrant flowers borne in clusters at the bases of the shining evergreen leaves. Brazil is the chief center of the coffee industry, but the plant is also cultivated extensively in Java, Sumatra, Arabia, Mexico, Central America, and the West Indies. In commerce, Mocha denotes a superior grade (originally from Mocha, Arabia) the berries of which are small and round, Java, a superior grade (originally from Java) having large oval berries. Maracaibo or Venezuela coffee resembles Java, and is often sold for it. Rio is a cheaper coffee having medium-sized, smooth, oval berries. For use, two or more kinds are usually blended.

co-ha'ir-ing-ness, n. Elec. Coherence

[L. cohabitare; co- + habitare to dwell, to have possession of (a place), freq. of habere to have. See HABIT, n. & v.]
1. To inhabit or live in company, or in the same place.
The Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark . . . they were not able to cohabit with that holy thing. South.
2. To dwell or live together as husband and wife. In the United States at the common law, marriage is presumed when a man and woman have cohabited permanently together, being reputed by those who know them to be husband and wife, and admitting the relationship. The presumption is removed if the relation is proved to have been of illicit origin. (See COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE.) The act of cohabiting does not necessarily imply coitus.
The law presumes that husband and wife cohabit together, even after a voluntary separation. Bouvier.

co-hab'it-ant (kō-hăb'ĭt-ănt), n. [L. cohabitans, p. pr.] One who dwells or cohabits with another.

co-here' (kō-hēr'), v. i.; CO-HERED' (-hērd'); CO-HER'ING (-hēr'ĭng). [L. cohaerere, cohaesum; co- + haerere to stick, adhere Cf. HESITATE.] 1. To stick together; to cleave; to be united; to hold fast, as parts of the same mass.
Neither knows he . . . how the solid parts of the body are united or cohere together. Locke
2. To be united or connected by some common principle or relationship, as by subordination to one purpose or idea; to follow naturally and logically, as the parts of a discourse, or as arguments in reasoning; to be logically consistent.
This object must also somehow cohere with what I have seen before, because I am one self, and my experience must somehow hold together. Josiah Royce.
3. To suit; to agree; to fit. Obs.
Had time cohered with place, or place with wishing. Shak.
Syn. — Stick, cleave, cling. See ADHERE.

co-her'ence (kō-hēr'ĕns) } n. [L. cohaerentia: cf. F.
co-her'en-cy (-ĕn-sĭ) } cohérence.] 1. A sticking or cleaving together; union of parts; cohesion
2. Connection or congruity arising from some common principle or relationship, as subordination to one idea or purpose, as in the parts of a discourse, or in a system of philosophy; consistency.
Coherence of discourse, and a direct tendency of all the parts of it to the argument in hand, are . . . to be found in him Locke
3. A coherent part or thing.
Syn. — COHERENCE, COHESION. Present usage tends to restrict COHESION to the physical, COHERENCE to the figurative, sense; as, the cohesion of masses of clay, the logical coherence of an argument. Cohesion retains, however, in certain connections, figurative force; as, the cohesion of individuals in a society or movement. See ADHERE.
A house stands and holds together by the natural properties, the weight and cohesion of the materials which compose it. Hudson.
To treat the subject with the clearness and coherence of which it is susceptible. Wordsworth
Some modes of dividing and presenting a subject will be more striking than others; and that, too, irrespective of its logical cohesion. H. Spencer.

co-her'ent (kō-hēr'ĕnt), a. [L. cohaerens, p. pr.: cf. F. cohérent. See COHERE.] 1. Sticking together; cleaving, as the parts of bodies, solid or fluid. Arbuthnot.
2. Composed of mutually dependent or related parts; making a logical whole; consistent; as, a coherent plan, argument, or discourse.
3. Logically consistent; as, a coherent thinker
4. Suitable or suited; adapted: accordant. Obs. Shak.
5. Bot. Having similar parts united, as the petals of a gamopetalous corolla. Cf. ADNATE, 1.

co-her'er (-ĕr), n. Elec. Any device in which an imperfectly conducting contact between pieces of metal or other conductors loosely resting against each other is materially improved in conductivity by the influence of Hertzian waves; — so called by Sir O. J. Lodge in 1894 on the assumption that the impact of the electric waves caused the loosely connected parts to cohere, or weld together, a condition easily destroyed by tapping. A common form of coherer as used in wireless telegraphy consists of a tube containing filings (usually a pinch of nickel and silver filings in equal parts) between terminal wires or plugs (called conductor plugs). Cf. ANTICOHERER, CYMOSCOPE, DECOHERER, WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY.

Coherer. A Vacuum Tube; BB Conductor Plugs; C Filings; D Holder

co-her'it-age (kō-hĕr'ĭt-ăj), n. A joint heritage.
co-he'sion (kō-hē'zhŭn), n. [Cf. F. cohésion. See COHERE.] 1. Act or state of cohering (in any sense).
2. Physics. That form of attraction by which the particles of a body are united throughout the mass, whether like or unlike; — commonly distinguished from adhesion, which unites bodies by their adjacent surfaces.
3. Bot. The union of similar parts, as of a gamopetalous corolla, monadelphous stamens, etc. Cf. ADHESION, 8.
Syn. — See COHERENCE

co-he'sive (-sĭv), a. 1. Causing to cohere; producing cohesion; as, "the cohesive power of public plunder."
2. Cohering, or sticking together, as in a mass; capable of cohering; tending to cohere; as, cohesive clay.
cohesive attraction. = COHESION, 2.
— co-he'sive-ly, adv. — co-he'sive-ness, n.

Cohn'heim's a're-as (kōn'hīmz). [After Julius F. Cohnheim (1839-84), German pathologist.] Anat. The polygonal areas seen in transverse sections of a striated muscle fiber. They consist of sections of muscle columns.

co-ho-bate (kō'hō-bāt), v. t.; CO'HO-BAT'ED (-bāt'ĕd); CO'HO-BAT'ING (-bāt'ĭng). [LL. cohobare, prob. of Ar. origin. cf. F. cohober.] Chem. To repeat the distillation of, pouring the liquor back upon the matter remaining in the vessel.

co'hort (kō'hôrt), n. [L cohors, prop., an inclosure. cf. F. cohorte. See COURT, n.] 1. In the Roman army, one of the ten divisions of a legion; a body of at first about 300, later 500 or 600, soldiers; also, a similar subdivision in several organizations of cavalry and auxiliary troops.
2. Any band or body of warriors, fig., a company, a band
3. Biol. In earlier classifications, a group of somewhat indefinite limitation; — in botany, nearly equiv. to the modern order; in zoology, usually, equiv. to the suborder.

co-hor'ta-tive (kō-hôr'tȧ-tĭv), a. [L. cohortari to incite, exhort.] 1. Of or pert. to cohortation, or exhortation.
2. Heb. Gram. Designating a lengthened form of the future (present or imperfect) tense, usually in the first person.

co'hosh (kō'hŏsh; kō-hŏsh'), n. [Prob. of Amer. Indian origin.] Any of several American medicinal plants rather closely related, as, the black cohosh (Cimicifuga racemosa); the blue cohosh (Caulophyllum thalictroides); the white cohosh (Actæa alba); the red cohosh (A. rubra).

co-hune' (kō-hōōn'), n., or cohune palm. [Prob. fr. a native name in Honduras.] A Central and South American pinnate-leaved palm (Attalea cohune), the very large and hard nuts of which are turned to make fancy articles, and also yield an oil used as a substitute for coconut oil.

coif (koif), n. [OF. coife, F. coiffe, LL. cofea, cuphia, fr. OHG. kuppa, kuppha, miter; cf. G. kopf head, in OHG. a drinking cup; perh. fr. the L. source of F. coupe cup. Cf. CUP, n., 1st COP.] A cap. Specif.: a A close-fitting cap covering the sides of the head, like a small hood without a cape. b An ecclesiastical headdress, as that of a Jewish priest. Obs. c A defensive skullcap, usually of iron or steel, formerly worn by soldiers, as under the hood of mail. d A ring of some soft and yet resisting material worn on the head to take the weight of the heavy heaume of the 12th and 13th centuries. e A white cap formerly worn by lawyers in England, esp. sergeants at law; hence, the order or rank of a sergeant at law.

coif (koif), v. t.; COIFED (koift); COIF'ING. [Cf. F. coiffer.] 1. To cover or dress with or as with a coif.
2. To dress or make up (the hair). Rare.

coifed (koift), a Wearing, or furnished with, a coif.

‖ coif'feur' (kwȧ-fûr'), n. [F.] A hairdresser.

coif'fure' (kwȧ-fûr'; koif'ūr; 277), n. [F., fr. coiffer. See COIF.] A headdress, or manner of dressing the hair.

coign, coigne (koin), n. A var. spelling of COIN, QUOIN, a projecting corner, wedge, etc.; — chiefly used in coign of vantage, a position advantageous for action or observation "No jutty, frieze, buttress, nor coign of vantage." Shak.
See you yon coign of the Capitol? yon corner stone? Shak.
The lithosphere would be depressed on four faces; . . . the four projecting coigns would stand up as continents. Nature.

coil (koil), v. t.; COILED (koild), COIL'ING. [OF. coillir, F. cueillir, to collect, gather together, L. colligere; col- + legere to gather. See LEGEND; cf. CULL, v. t., COLLECT.]
1. To wind cylindrically or spirally, as, to coil a rope when not in use; the snake coiled itself before springing.
2. To encircle and hold with or as with coils. Obs. or R.

coil, v. i. To wind or turn itself cylindrically or spirally; to form a coil; to wind; — often with about or around.
You can see his fiery serpents . . .
Coiling, playing in the water. Longfellow

coil, n. 1. A series of rings, or a spiral, of cable, rope, or the like, when coiled or wound; also, a single ring or convolution of such a series.
2. A series of connected pipes in rows, layers, or windings, as in steam heating apparatus.
3. Elec. A spiral of wire, or an instrument composed of such a spiral and its accessories. See INDUCTION COIL.

coil, n. [Of uncertain origin.] A noise, tumult, bustle, fuss, or confusion. Archaic or Dial. Eng. R. Browning.
For in that sleep of death what dreams may come
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil, Must give us pause. Shak

coil'er (-ẽr), n. One that coils or winds; specif., Cotton Spinning, an apparatus for coiling the sliver by feeding it through a tube attached to an annular revolving plate, called a coiler plate, into oppositely revolving coiler cans.

coiler can. a Woolen Manuf. A can for receiving the sliver from the cards. It is often used as a substitute for the balling head. b Cotton Spinning. See COILER.

coin (koin), n. [F., formerly also coing, wedge, stamp, corner, fr. L. cuneus wedge. Cf. COIGN, QUOIN, CUNEIFORM.] 1. A corner, corner stone, or wedge. See QUOIN.
2. Obs. a A die for coining money; also, a mint. b The stamped impress of money.
3. A piece of metal (or, rarely, of some other material) certified by a mark or marks upon it to be of a definite intrinsic or exchange value, and issued by government authority to be used as money; also, such pieces collectively. That side of a coin (or medal) which bears the more important design, as the head of the monarch, is the obverse, the other the reverse. The inscription or legend includes all the letters and numerals on the coin. Within the outer circle commonly formed by the legend is the field, occupied by the main device. Below the field, and distinct from it, is the exergue, if it occurs. The piece of metal on which the design is impressed is called the flan.

TABLE OF COINS AND MONEYS OF ACCOUNT.

NOTE In this table the intrinsic values of gold coins are given, the fixed price for fine gold being $20.67, or £4 4s 11½d., per Troy ounce The former current value, if different from this, is usually stated in the proper vocabulary place. Silver coins, unless guaranteed by gold, are rated at their intrinsic value at the arbitrary price of 60 cents, or about 2s. 5⅜d., a Troy ounce for fine silver (representing a ratio of 34.45 : 1). Such coins and the smaller coins dependent on them are indicated by the sign §; their value varies with the market price of silver. Copper and bronze coins are usually token coins, the values for which (as given) are nominal, not intrinsic. For coinage purposes copper is usually alloyed to render it harder, hence many coins commonly described as copper are, properly speaking, bronze. On account of the confusion so arising both kinds of coins are given as copper in the table Paper money is not considered in this table.

col'lege (kŏl'ĕj; -ĭj; 7), n. [F. collège, L. collegium, fr. collega colleague. See COLLEAGUE.] 1. A collection, body, or society of persons engaged in common pursuits, or having common duties and interests, and sometimes, by charter, peculiar rights and privileges; specif., such a collection treated in law in one or more respects as a unit. Cf. CORPORATION, UNIVERSITY.
2. A company or assemblage, as a club or reunion.
Thick as the college of the bees in May Dryden
3. A body of clergy living in common on a foundation.
4. A society of scholars or friends of learning, incorporated for study or instruction, esp. in the higher branches of knowledge. In Great Britain the college was originally a corporation founded to aid its members to pursue university studies. When founded at a university center, such colleges came to admit students not on the foundation and eventually entered as self-governing societies into the university organization, as at Oxford and Cambridge. When apart from a university, they developed into independent schools, and the name college is often assumed by schools having no primarily collegiate foundation. In the case of a university with but a single (or a single surviving) college, the terms college and university become practically synonymous, as at Edinburgh and Glasgow. Finally, college is applied to an institution of higher learning affiliated to a university. In the United States the college is primarily an institution of higher learning having but a single faculty and curriculum, usually leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts; there is, however, no clear line of demarcation, as institutions have retained the name college while extending their instruction to university scope. In the universities the name college is usually given to the organization for instruction in the liberal arts and sciences, leading to the bachelor's degree, as distinguished from the graduate and professional schools. See UNIVERSITY.
5. An institution for special instruction, usually of a professional kind; as, a college of music or theology.
6. A building, or number of buildings, used by a college; also, sometimes, a cathedral close.

col·len'chy·ma (kŏ·lĕn'kĭ·mȧ), n. [NL.; Gr. κόλλα glue + -enchyma.] Bot. A tissue of cells which are thickened at the angles and frequently elongated. As it consists of living protoplasm, collenchyma remains elastic and capable of further growth; hence, it often occurs in the younger or more tender parts of a plant as strengthening tissue where bast or libriform cells would be too rigid.

col'len·chym'a·tous (kŏl'ĕn·kĭm'ă·tŭs), a. a Bot. Of or pert. to collenchyma. b Zool. Of or pert. to collenchyme.

col·len'chyme (kŏ·lĕn'kĭm; kŏl'ĕn·kĭm), n [See COLLENCHYMA.] a Zool. The mesodermal tissue of sponges. b Bot. Collenchyma.

Col'le's frac'ture (kŏl'lāz). [After G. Colle (1558–1630), Italian physician.] Med. Fracture of the lower end of the radius with backward displacement of the lower fragment. The line of fracture is from one third to three fourths of an inch above the wrist.

col'let (kŏl'ĕt; -ĭt), n. [F. collet, dim. fr. L. collum neck. See COLLAR.] 1. A small collar or neckband. Obs. Foxe.
2. A metal band, collar, ferrule, flange, ring, or the like; specif.: a Horol. A small collar pierced to receive the inner end of a balance spring, fixed friction-tight on the balance staff of a watch or chronometer. b Mach. A casing or socket for holding a drill or other tool, or a chuck for gripping the bar of metal to be shaped in a turret lathe.
3. Jewelry. a A circle or flange (orig. in a ring) in which a precious stone is set.
How full the collet with his jewel is! Cowley.

col'lie (kŏl'ĭ), n. [Cf Gael. cuilean whelp, puppy, dog.] The Scotch shepherd dog. There are two breeds, the rough-haired and smooth-haired, differing only in their coat. The rough-haired is the common variety. It is somewhat wolflike in build, of rather large size, with tapering muzzle and long well-feathered tail, and a frill of long fluffy hair on the neck and fore part of the chest. Collies are used for herding sheep, in which they exhibit great intelligence, but they are usually quick-tempered and crafty in disposition.

Rough-haired Collie.

col'lier (kŏl'yẽr), n. [ME. colier. See COAL.] 1. A worker or dealer in coal; now, usually, a coal miner.
2. A vessel employed in transporting coal.
3. a The dolphin fly. b The common swift. Local, Eng.

col'lier's pur'chase (kŏl'yẽrz). A purchase or extra pull on a ship's cable obtained by hooking the cat to a strap put on the cable and hauling on the catfall with the fish tackle; also, the tackles so arranged.

col'lier·y (kŏl'yẽr·ĭ), n.; pl. -IES (-ĭz). [Cf. COALERY, COLLIER.] 1. The place where coal is dug; a coal mine, and the buildings, etc., belonging to it.
2. Coal mining; also, coal trade. Obs. Johnson.

The pieces of isinglass are colligated in rows. Nicholson.
2. Logic. To bring together by colligation; to sum up in a single proposition.

2. Logic. That process by which a number of isolated facts are brought together under one conception, or summed up in a general proposition.
Colligation is not always induction, but induction is always colligation J. S. Mill col'li·ga·tive (kŏl'ĭ·gā·tĭv), a. Phys. Chem. Depending on, or varying with, the number of molecules and not their nature; as, gaseous pressure is a colligative property.

col'li·mate (kŏl'ĭ·māt), v. t.; COL'LI·MAT·ED (-māt'ĕd); COL'LI·MAT'ING (-māt'ĭng). [See COLLIMATION.] Physics & Astron. To render parallel to a certain line or direction; to render parallel, as rays of light; to adjust the line of sight of (a transit, level, etc.) so that it is in its proper position relative to the other parts of the instrument (in a transit, at right angles to the horizontal axis of revolution).

col'li·mat'ing (-māt'ĭng), p. pr. & vb. n. of COLLIMATE, v. collimating eyepiece, an eyepiece with a diagonal reflector for illumination, used in taking a nadir observation. — c. lens, Optics, a lens used for producing parallel rays of light.

col'li·ma'tion (-mā'shŭn), n. [Cf. F. collimation, fr. a false reading (collimare) for L. collineare to direct in a straight line, col- + linea line. Cf. COLLINEATION.] 1. Act of collimating, or state of being collimated.
2. See COLLIMATION ERROR.

collimation axis (of a transit instrument). The straight line passing through the optical center of the object glass and the horizontal rotation axis, perpendicular to the latter.

collimation plane. The plane described by the collimation axis during revolution of the transit.

col'li·ma'tor (kŏl'ĭ·mā'tẽr), n. 1. Optics. a A device consisting of a tube with a convex lens or achromatic objective and, at the focus of the latter, an arrangement of cross hairs, used as a fixed source of parallel rays in collimating certain instruments, esp. a transit or meridian circle. b A tube having at one end a convex lens, and at its principal focus a slit, — used for producing a beam of parallel rays, as in the spectroscope; also, a lens so used.
2. A similar device used for various purposes, as in aiming cannon at night.

col'lin (kŏl'ĭn), n. [Gr. κόλλα glue.] A very pure form of gelatin.

col·lin'e·ar (kŏ·lĭn'ē·ẽr), a. [See COL-; LINEAR.] Lying in the same straight line, also, formerly, in the same plane. collinear ranges, Math., systems or rows of points on the same line.
— col·lin'e·ar'i·ty (-ăr'ĭ·tĭ), n. — col·lin'e·ar·ly, adv.

col·lin'e·a'tion (-ā'shŭn), n. [L. collineare to direct in a straight line. See COLLIMATION.] 1. Act of aiming at, or directing in a line with, a fixed object. Rare.
2. Math. a The process or result of arranging elements, esp. points, on a right line. b In Sophus Lie's theories, a self-dualistic space transformation, which transforms points into points, lines into lines, and planes into planes.

Col·lin'si·a (kŏ·lĭn'sĭ·ȧ; -zĭ·ȧ), n. [NL., after Zaccheus Collins (1764–1831), American botanist.] Bot. A genus of

col-lo'di-on (-ŭn), n. [Gr. κολλωδης like glue; κόλλα glue + εἶδος form. Cf. COLLOID.] Chem. A viscous liquid consisting of a mixture of alcohol and ether in which soluble guncotton or pyroxylin is dissolved (see GUNCOTTON). On evaporation of the solvents the pyroxylin remains in a tough adhesive form which is used for photographic films, as a coating for wounds, etc.

col-lo'di-on-ize (-ĭz), v. t.; COL-LO'DI-ON-IZED (-ĭzd); COL-LO'DI-ON-IZ'ING (-ĭz'ĭng). To treat with collodion. — col-lo'di-on-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ĭ-zā'-), n.

collodion process. Photog. A process in which collodion is used as a vehicle for the sensitive salts. In its original form (the wet-plate process), the negative was prepared by coating a glass plate with collodion containing iodides and bromides, immersing in a solution of silver nitrate, exposing immediately, and developing with pyrogallic acid or ferrous sulphate. This process yielded to the dry-plate process, in which an emulsion of the sensitive salts in collodion is flowed over the plate and allowed to dry. Gelatin is now generally used in this process in place of collodion. See PHOTOGRAPHY.

col-lo'di-o-type' (kŏ-lō'dĭ-ō-tīp'), n. Photog. A picture obtained by the collodion process; also, the process itself.

col'lo-graph (kŏl'ō-grăf), n. [Gr. κόλλα glue + -graph.] a An apparatus for manifold copying by means of a pad or film of gelatin, treated with potassium bichromate. b = COLLOTYPE. — col'lo-graph'ic (-grăf'ĭk), a. — col-log'ra-phy (kŏ-lŏg'rā-fĭ), n.

col-logue' (kŏ-lōg'), v. i.; COL-LOGUED' (-lōgd'); COL-LO'-GUING (-lō'gĭng). [Cf. L. colloqui to talk together, F. colloque dialogue, and E. dialogue. Cf. COLLOCUTION.] 1. To gloze; flatter. Obs.

2. To give feigned adherence or assent. Obs.

3. To intrigue or conspire; to collude. Dial.

4. To talk or confer secretly or confidentially. Colloq.

Pray go in; and, sister, salve the matter,

col-logue' (kŏ-lōg'), v. t. To coax or wheedle. Obs.

col'loid (kŏl'oid), a. [Gr. κόλλα glue + -oid. Cf. COLLODION.] Resembling glue or jelly; gelatinous; colloidal; as, colloid tumors.

colloid degeneration, Med., a morbid transformation of tissues into a gumlike or gelatinous substance, occurring in carcinoma and other tumors.

col'loid, n. 1. Chem. A substance of gelatinous nature, permeable by crystalloid solutions, diffusing not at all or very slowly through animal or vegetable membranes, and scarcely affecting by its presence the freezing point or vapor tension of its solutions; also, any of various non-gelatinous substances exhibiting the above properties; — opposed to crystalloid. Among the gelatinous colloids are gelatin, starch, albumin, etc. Various inorganic compounds, and metals such as silver and gold, may also be obtained in colloidal form, but it is probable that they are then only in a state of extremely fine suspension.

2. Med. A gelatinous substance found in colloid degeneration and colloid cancer.

col'loi'dal (kŏ-loi'dăl), a. Of, pert. to, or of the nature of, a colloid or colloids. — col'loid-al'i-ty (kŏl'oi-dăl'ĭ-tĭ), n.

We have therefore to distinguish the viscous, gelatinizing, colloidal mixtures, not coagulated by salts, from the nonviscous, nongelatinizing, but readily coagulable mixtures The former class I shall designate colloidal solutions, the latter, colloidal suspensions A. A Noyes col'lop (kŏl'ŭp), n. Also colp. [ME. colloppe, coloppe, colhoppe; origin uncertain; cf. OSw. kolhuppad (prob.) egg fried on bacon. The first part of the word is perh. col coal.]

1 A small slice of meat, cooked or intended for cooking; esp., a rasher of bacon; also, formerly, any piece of flesh.

With that red, gaunt, and colloped neck astrain. R. Browning.

col-lo'qui-al (kŏ-lō'kwĭ-ăl), a. [See COLLOQUY.] Pertaining to, or used in, conversation, esp. common and familiar conversation; conversational; hence, unstudied; informal; as, colloquial phrases; colloquial pronunciations.

His [Johnson's] colloquial talents were, indeed, of the highest order. Macaulay.
Every educated person speaks his mother tongue in at least two ways, and the difference between the dignified and the colloquial style is considerable G. L. Kittredge.

col-lo'qui-al-ism (-ĭz'm), n. Colloquial style or quality; a colloquial expression; as, the colloquialism of the day.

Slang words frequently rise to the rank of colloqualisms, and thus in time gain admission to the more formal language. G L. Kittredge.

Syn. — See CANT.

col'lo-quist (kŏl'ō-kwĭst), n. A speaker in a colloquy.

col-lo'qui-um (kŏ-lō'kwĭ-ŭm), n.; pl. -QUIA (-a). [L., conversation. See COLLOQUY, COLLOCUTION.] 1. A colloquy; a conversation. Obs.

2. Law. That part of the plaintiff's pleading in an action for slander which avers that the defendant spoke the slanderous words concerning the plaintiff or the subject matter in question in a certain conversation (in quodam colloquio).

3. A conference; a meeting for discussion. Rare.

col'lo-quize (kŏl'ō-kwīz), v. i.; COL'LO-QUIZED (-kwīzd); COL'LO-QUIZ'ING (-kwīz'ĭng). To hold colloquy, to converse.

col'lo-quy (-kwĭ), n.; pl. -QUIES (-kwĭz). [L. colloquium. See COLLOCUTION.] 1. Mutual discourse; esp., a somewhat formal conference or debate.

They went to Worms, to the colloquy there about religion. A. Wood.

2. Eccl. A legislative and judicial court made up of pastors and representative elders from a group of Reformed Genevan or Presbyterian churches.

col'lo-type (kŏl'ō-tīp), n. [Gr κόλλα glue + -type] A photomechanical print made directly from a hardened film of gelatin or other colloid; also, the process of making such prints. According to one method, the film is sensitized with potassium dichromate and exposed to light under a reversed negative. After the dichromate has been washed out, the film is soaked in glycerin and water. As this treatment causes swelling in those parts of the film which have been acted on by light, a plate results from which impressions can be taken with prepared ink. The albertype, phototype, and heliotype are forms of collotype.

col'lo-typ'y (-tīp'ĭ), n. The collotype process.

col'luc-ta'tion (kŏl'ŭk-tā'shŭn), n. [L. collectatio, fr. colluctari to struggle with; col- + luctari to struggle.] A struggling; a contention. Obs. or Archaic.

Collectation with old hags and hobgoblins. Dr. H. More

col-lude' (kŏ-lūd'), v. i.; COL-LUD'ED (-lūd'ĕd); COL-LUD'ING (-lūd'ĭng). [L. colludere, -lusum; col- + ludere to play. See LUDICROUS.] To have secretly a joint part or share in an action, to play into each other's hands; to conspire or connive; to act in concert. — col-lud'er (-lūd'ẽr), n

If they let things take their course, they will be represented as colluding with sedition. Burke.

col-lu'sion (kŏ-lū'zhŭn), n. [L. collusio: cf. F. collusion. See COLLUDE.] 1. A secret agreement and cooperation for a fraudulent or deceitful purpose; a playing into each other's hands; deceit; fraud.

The foxe, master of collusion. Spenser.
By the ignorance of the merchants or dishonesty of the weavers, or the collusion of both, the ware was bad and the price excessive Swift.

2. Law. An agreement between two or more persons to defraud a person of his rights by the forms of law, or to obtain an object forbidden by law. Bouvier.

Syn. — COLLUSION, CONNIVANCE. COLLUSION implies a secret understanding, whereby one party plays into another's hands for fraudulent purposes; as, collusion between two witnesses, "a blundering world, in collusion with a prejudiced philosophy" (W. Pater). CONNIVANCE (cf. WINK), without involving active participation, implies a winking at wrongdoing, or guilty assent to it; as, "I solemnly promised . . . to enter into no clubs and societies, which nevertheless exist with the knowledge and connivance of the authorities" (W. O. Robinson); "In presence of his ladylove, perhaps under her window and certainly with her connivance, he was unmercifully thrashed" (Stevenson).

col-lu'sive (-sĭv), a. 1. Characterized by, or of the nature of, collusion; done or planned in collusion. "Collusive arguings." J. Trapp. "Collusive divorces." Strype.

2. Acting in collusion. "Collusive parties." Burke.

The wide continent of America invited colonization. Bancroft.

2. Settlement in or of a district by persons brought in to acquire a merely voting residence or to vote illegally.

col'o-ni-za'tion-ist (kŏl'ŏ-nĭ-zā'shŭn-ĭst; -nī-zā'shŭn-ĭst), n. An advocate of colonization, esp., U. S. Hist., of Africa by negroes from the United States.

col'o-nize (kŏl'ŏ-nīz), v. t.; COL'O-NIZED (-nīzd); COL'O-NIZ'-ING (-nīz'ĭng). [Cf. F. coloniser.] 1. To plant or establish a colony or colonies in; to people with colonists; to migrate to and settle in. Bacon.

2. To gather, settle, or establish in a colony, or compact settlement; as, Germany colonizes her tramps.

3 To settle (a district, etc.) with illegal or irregularly qualified voters.

col'o-nize, v. i. To remove to, and settle in, a distant country, to make or establish a colony.

col'o-niz'er (-nīz'ĕr), n. One who colonizes.

col'on-nade' (kŏl'ŏ-nād'), n. [F. colonnade, It. colonnata, fr colonna column. See COLONEL.] Arch. A series or range of columns placed at regular intervals, sometimes with adjuncts, as pavement, stylobate, roof, etc.; — usually limited to such as carry an architrave. When in front of a building, it is called a portico; when surrounding, or carried about three sides of, a building or an open court or square, a peristyle.

col'on-nad'ed (-nād'ĕd), a. Provided with a colonnade; as, the colonnaded streets of ancient Syria.

col'on-nette' (-nĕt'), n. [F., dim. of colonne column.] 1. Arch. A small column, esp. one of many grouped as in a parapet, balustrade, or clustered column.

2. Anat. A slender column, as of bone.

‖ co-lo'nus (kŏ-lō'nŭs), n.; pl. COLONI (-nī). [L.] In the later Roman Empire, a serf or tenant farmer bound to the soil, and paying a fixed rent Although not slaves, the coloni passed with the lands; they were of two classes; those known as liberi coloni, tributarii, or inquilini, having few obligations beyond the payment of the rent, and the adscriptitii, or censiti, who had no property rights other than those in peculium.

col'o-ny (kŏl'ŏ-nĭ), n.; pl. -NIES (-nĭz). [L. colonia, fr. colonus farmer, fr. colere to cultivate, dwell: cf. F. colonie. Cf. CULTURE.] 1. A Roman colonia, which was a subject settlement of Romans (orig. of coloni) in a newly acquired or hostile country, made orig as a means of permanent occupation.

2. A Greek apoikia (Gr. ἀποικία), or a settlement, nearly always independent or self-governing, of Greeks in a foreign country.

3. A company of people transplanted from their mother country to a remote province or country, and remaining subject to the jurisdiction of the parent state; loosely, any distant territory dependent on a ruling power.

4. The district or country colonized; a settlement.

5. A group of people situated so as to resemble a colony; as: a A company of persons from the same country sojourning in a foreign city or land; as, the American colony in Paris. b An isolated group of people engaged in the same occupation; as, a colony of artists.

6. Biol. A collection of organisms of the same kind living in close association; as: a A community of ants, bees, or other social animals. b A number of animals or plants living together, more or less isolated from others of the same species. c A cœnobium or cell family. d An aggregation of bacteria in a pure culture.

7. Zoöl. The entire aggregation of zooids of a compound animal.

8. Geol. An assemblage of fossils apparently contained in rocks of an earlier formation than that to which they normally belong. This phenomenon is believed to be caused by displacement of the strata.

9. A rural settlement or estate. A Latinism.

Syn. — See DEPENDENCY.

col'o-pex'i-a (kŏl'ŏ-pĕk'sĭ-ȧ), col'o-pex'y (kŏl'ŏ-pĕk'sĭ), n. [NL. colopexia; Gr. κόλον colon + πῆξις a fixing.] Surg. The operation of attaching by suture the sigmoid flexure to the abdominal wall.

col'o-phene (kŏl'ŏ-fēn), n. [See COLOPHONY.] Chem. An oily hydrocarbon, $C_{20}H_{32}$, a high-boiling component of the mixture obtained by treating oil of turpentine with sulphuric acid.

col'o-phon (-fŏn), n. [L. colophon finishing stroke, Gr. κολοφών.] 1. The finishing touch. Obs.

2. An inscription placed at the end of a book or manuscript, often containing facts relative to its production, as the scribe's, illuminator's, or printer's name, the place and date of publication, title, etc.

The colophon, or final description, fell into disuse, and . . . the title page had become the principal direct means of identifying the book. De Morgan.

3. Print. An emblem, usually a device assumed by the publishing house, placed either on the title page or at the end of a book.

co-loph'o-nate (kŏ-lŏf'ŏ-nāt), n. Chem. A salt or ester of colophonic acid.

col'o-phon'ic (kŏl'ŏ-fŏn'ĭk), a. Chem. Pert. to or designating any of several acids, $C_{20}H_{30}O_2$, found in colophony.

col'o-pho-nite (kŏl'ŏ-fŏ-nīt), n. [Cf. F. colophonite.] Min. A coarse kind of garnet of the variety andradite; — so called because in color and luster it is like colophony.

col'o-pho'ny (-fō'nĭ; kŏ-lŏf'ŏ-nĭ), col'o-pho'ni-um (kŏl'-ŏ-fō'nĭ-ŭm), n. [Gr. ἡ κολοφωνια (sc. ῥητινη resin, gum) resin, fr. Κολοφώνιος of or from Colophon in Ionia.] Rosin.

col'or, col'our (kŭl'ĕr), n. [ME. colour, culur, colur, color, OF. the same, and couleur, F. couleur, L. color; prob. akin to celare to conceal (the color taken as that which covers). See HELMET.] 1. A property or quality of visible phenomena, distinct from form and from light and shade, depending upon the effect of light of different wave lengths on the retina. Physically, white is resolvable into a whole series of hues corresponding to rays of different wave lengths and called spectral colors (see SPECTRUM). By combinations of these, many other hues can be produced, so that the total number distinguishable by the eye, including tints and shades, is many thousand. An object that reflects equally all rays assumes the color of whatever light is thrown upon it; it is commonly said to be white because ordinarily viewed by white light. Many objects reflect only certain kinds of rays, converting the others into heat energy or allowing them to pass through; hence, in white light they show colors depending on the particular combinations of rays which they send to the eye, either by reflection or transmission. An object incapable of reflecting any rays does not exist, but such as approach this condition are said to be black. Primary colors are the principal colors of the spectrum (Newton's seven were red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet), esp. certain fundamental colors by the combination of which (color mixture) any other color can be produced. In the Young-Helmholtz theory (see below) they are red, green, and blue (or violet) Thus, red and green produce yellow; red and blue, purple; red, green, and blue give white or gray. This may be demonstrated with a color top or by throwing colored lights on the same white object. For every color there is a complementary color, that is, a color which properly combined with it gives white (or gray). Such color mixture is to be carefully distinguished from the mixture of pigments, for, since each pigment absorbs certain rays, the latter process is one of subtraction, and not addition, of light rays. Blue and yellow light may be combined so as to form white light, but the mixture of a blue and a yellow pigment is green. The primary pigment colors usually recognized are red (crimson), yellow, and blue. Every color has three qualities, called color constants: (1) hue, or color tone, the quality by which, for example, bluish red differs from orange red; (2) value or luminosity, by which, for example, light red differs from dark red; and (3) chroma, purity, or intensity, by which, for example, a pure or spectral red differs from a broken or grayish red. A saturated color is one as free as possible from white or black; mixtures of the same with white are called tints, and with black, shades. Psychologically, white, gray, and black are distinguished from the color series as forming the scale of brightness. Sensations of color probably depend directly upon the retinal structures known as cones, the rods being apparently concerned in achromatic vision only. The two chief theories of color vision are: (1) The Young-Helmholtz theory, which assumes that there are three sets of nerves corresponding to red, green, and blue (or violet), and that any train of waves reaching the retina stimulates these nerves in different degrees. Color-blind persons are those in whom one or more of these sets fail to respond. (2) The Hering theory, according to which there are in the retina three substances affected by light, one by green and red, another by blue and yellow, and the third and most plentiful by black and white. See LIGHT, EYE, RETINA, VISION, COLOR BLINDNESS; cf. AFTERIMAGE.

2. A particular variety of the above quality; as, the colors of the rainbow; — strictly, excluding black and white.

3. Complexion; esp., the hue characteristic of good health and spirits; ruddy complexion; — said also of the flush caused by blushing.

Give color to my pale cheek. Shak.

4. A hue noticeable as being other than that regarded as normal or prevalent, or other than black or white; as, to dress in colors. Specif.: a Bot. A hue other than green. b The hue of races of men other than white, esp. of negroes; also, formerly, other than white or black.

5. That which is used to give color; a paint; a pigment; as, oil colors or water colors.

6. pl. A distinguishing colored badge, dress, or device, as the cognizance of a knight, a rosette or ribbon worn by adherents of a political party, etc.; as, the colors of a race horse (that is, of the cap and jacket worn by the jockey).

7. Chiefly in pl. A flag, ensign, etc., of a nation flown by a ship, or of a body of infantry, artillery, or engineers, as a regiment or battalion; also, the regiment or the service. The flag of cavalry is not called color but standard.

The word color implies the National Color and includes the Regimental (color when both are present. U. S. Infantry Drill Regs.

Each [British] regiment or battalion is supplied with a royal or King's color, and a regimental color. The former is a Union Jack and the latter a flag of the same color as the facings of the regiment. N. Int. Encyc.

8. pl. U. S. Navy. A salute to the flag accompanied by music at 8 A. M. and sunset, at hoisting and lowering it.

9. An ensign's commission. Obs.

10. Mining. Valuable mineral; esp., gold shown by washing earth or crushed ore in a pan; also, a particle of the valuable substance.

11. Outward show or semblance, esp. such as covers or hides the real character of anything; aspect; guise; appearance; as, color of law; color of reason.

They had let down the boat into the sea, under color as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship. Acts XXVII. 30.

That he should die is worthy policy;
But yet we want a color for his death. Shak.

12. An appearance or pretense taken as justification; pretext; show of reason; also, formerly, excuse; disguise.

Which . . . afforded a color for detaining the troops. J. Mill.

13. Shade or variety of character; kind; species.

Boys and women are for the most part cattle of this color. Shak.

14. Law. An appearance or semblance of a right, authority, office, or the like; thus, formerly, in England in the common-law pleading by confession and avoidance it was necessary that the confession should give color, that is, give or credit to the plaintiff an apparent right, which was to be shown insufficient in law by being avoided, thus removing the cause from the jury to the court. This color was called express color when it was given by pleading feigned matter; implied color when it arose only from the nature of the defense.

15. Art & Criticism. a The tone, scheme, or harmony of colors in a painting; coloration in producing effects; as, Tintoretto is a master of color; also, in an engraving or monochrome, an effect of coloration produced by chiaroscuro. b Literature. The free use of words or descriptions strong in concrete suggestiveness or vivid in respect to the color, or colour, of office, Law, the pretense or appearance of official authority in one who, being an officer in law or fact, is without the authority claimed. — c. of title, Law, an apparent but invalid title, based upon a written instrument or record; also, the instrument itself. Sometimes, an apparent ownership claimed by adverse possession. Col'u-bri'na (kŏl'ū-brī'nȧ), n. pl. [NL. See COLUBRINE.] Zoöl. A superfamily or suborder of snakes nearly or exactly equivalent to Aglyphodontia and consisting of nonpoisonous forms. In some classifications the poisonous Proteroglypha are included.

Syn. — COLOR, HUE, TINT, TINGE, SHADE. In nontechnical usage, COLOR is the generic term; as, "Walden is blue at one time and green at another. . . . Lying between the earth and the heavens, it partakes of the color of both" (Thoreau). HUE, in poetry or elevated prose, is often synonymous with color; as, "As brown in hue as hazelnuts and sweeter than the kernels" (Shak.). More specifically, hue suggests some modification of color; as, "Their shining green has changed to a less vivid hue; they are taking bluish tones here and there" (Lafcadio Hearn). TINT, in common usage, suggests a slight or delicate touching with any color; as, "Faint and shadowy in the pale tint he had used" (M. Hewlett); "It is well known that a large plate of glass will have a green tint . . . but a small piece of the same will be colorless" (Thoreau). TINGE implies more of infusion or stain than tint; as, "The water . . . imparts to the body of one bathing in it a yellowish tinge" (Thoreau); "Clouds . . . tinged with rose by the setting sun" (Ruskin); "The atmosphere so tinged with azure that what artists call the middle distance partakes also of that hue" (T. Hardy). SHADE expresses degree of color; as, "The dark ultramarine of the west turns a shade paler" (J. C. Van Dyke). Tinge and shade are used fig. in the sense of trace, touch, trifle, "thought" (cf. TASTE, TURN, VEIN); as, a tinge of sadness, a shade less cordial than usual.

col'u-brine (kŏl'ū-brĭn; -brīn), a. [L. colubrinus.] 1. Pert. to, or like, a snake; hence, cunning; crafty. Johnson.
2. Zoöl. Of or pert. to the subfamily Colubrinæ, the family Colubridæ, or the suborder Colubrina. Owing to the various limits assigned to these groups, the meaning of colubrine is very indefinite. It usually designates the aglyphodont nonpoisonous snakes, of which the familiar harmless snakes of Europe and North America are examples.

co-lu'go (kō-lōō'gō), n. [Prob. an aboriginal name.] The so-called flying lemur. See under FLYING.

Co-lum'ba (kō-lŭm'bȧ), n. [L., dove.] 1. Zoöl. An extensive genus consisting of the typical pigeons. It includes the rock dove (C. livia) from which the domestic pigeons are derived, and the band-tailed pigeon (C. fasciata) of the western United States.
2. Hence: a [l. c.] Eccl. A medieval dove-shaped vessel for the sacrament. b (gen. COLUMBÆ.) Astron. A southern constellation adjoining Canis Major; the Dove; — called also Columba Noachi, Colomba Noæ, or Noah's Dove.

Co-lum'bæ (kō-lŭm'bē), n. pl. [L., doves.] Zoöl. The order or suborder of schizognathous altricial birds consisting of the doves and pigeons and the extinct dodo and solitaire.

col'um-ba'ri-um (kŏl'ŭm-bā'rĭ-ŭm), n.; L. pl. -BARIA (-a). [L., fr. columba a dove.] 1. Rom. Antiq. A dovecote or pigeon house.
2. A structure of vaults lined with recesses for cinerary urns, as in Roman catacombs and modern crematories; also, pl., the niches in such a structure.

col'um-ba-ry (kŏl'ŭm-bā-rĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). [See COLUMBARIUM.] A dovecote; a pigeon house Sir T. Browne.

co-lum'bate (kō-lŭm'bāt), n. A salt of columbic acid.

Col'um-batz fly or midge (kŏl'ŭm-bȧts). [From Columbatz, for Servian Golubac, near Požarevać on the Danube.] A small fly (Simulium columbatzense) similar in habits to the buffalo gnat of America, and sometimes very destructive in the Danube valley.

Col'um-bel'la (kŏl'ŭm-bĕl'ȧ), n. [NL., dim. of L. columba a dove, — from a fancied resemblance, in color and form, of some species.] Zoöl. A genus of small rachiglossate gastropods with thick fusiform shell, abundant in tropical seas Some species, as Columbella mercatoria, were formerly used as shell money.

Co-lum'bi-a (kō-lŭm'bĭ-ȧ), n. America, the United States; — a poetical appellation given in honor of Columbus, the discoverer.

Columbia chub A small cyprinoid fish (Mylocheilus caurinus) of the streams and lakes of the northwestern United States and British Columbia.

co-lum'bi-ad (kō-lŭm'bĭ-ăd), n. [From Columbia, the United States. See -IAD.] 1. [cap.] An epic of America. Epics so entitled have been written by Mme. du Boccage, J. L. Moore, and J. Barlow.
2. Ordnance. A heavy, long-chambered, muzzle-loading gun, very thick behind the trunnions, designed for throwing shells and shot at high angles of elevation if necessary. It was invented by Colonel George Bomford, U. S. A., and was much used in the war of 1812 between the United States and Great Britain. It was succeeded by the Rodman gun, and both were rendered obsolete by the invention of modern rifled guns.

Co-lum'bi-an (-ăn), a [From COLUMBIA.] Of or pertaining to the United States, or America, or Christopher Columbus, the discoverer.
Columbian spirit, a purified form of wood alcohol.

co-lum'bi-an, n. Print. A size of type. See TYPE.

This is Columbian type.

co-lum'bic, a. [From COLUMBIUM.] Chem. Pertaining to, or containing, columbium. — columbic acid, any of various acids derived from columbic oxide, Cb_2O_5, and known in the form of their salts, the columbates or niobates, as $K_8Cb_6O_{19}$, $K_4Cb_2O_7$, $Na_{10}Cb_{12}O_{35}$, etc.

Co-lum'bi-dæ (-bĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL. See COLUMBA.] Zoöl. The family consisting of the doves and pigeons. See PIGEON.

col'um-bif'er-ous (kŏl'ŭm-bĭf'ĕr-ŭs), a. [columbium + -ferous.] Producing or containing columbium.

col'um-bine (kŏl'ŭm-bĭn; -bīn), a. [L. columbinus, fr. columba dove: cf. F. colombin.] Of or pert. to a dove; dovelike; dove-colored. "Columbine innocency." Bacon.

col'um-bine (kŏl'ŭm-bĭn), n. [LL. columbina, L. columbinus dovelike, fr. columba dove: cf. F. colombine. Perh. so called from the beaklike spurs of its flowers.] Any ranunculaceous plant of the genus Aquilegia, esp. the garden columbine (A. vulgaris), or the red columbine (A. canadensis), of eastern North America. See AQUILEGIA.

Columbine (Aquilegia canadensis). (⅓)

co-lum'bite (kŏ-lŭm'bīt), n. [See COLUMBIUM.] Min. An iron columbate, $Fe(CbO_3)_2$, often containing manganese, and grading into tantalite. It is black, and has a bright submetallic luster. H., 6. Sp. gr., 5.4–6.5.

co-lum'bi-um (-bĭ-ŭm), n. [NL., fr. Columbia the United States.] Chem. A metallic element of steel-gray color and brilliant luster, found combined in various rare minerals. Tantalum, which it closely resembles chemically, is usually associated with it. The chief valence of columbium is five. Sp. gr., 7.06. Symbol, Cb (or Nb); atomic weight, 93.5. It was discovered in 1801 by Hatchett in columbite from America and by him named columbium; it was rediscovered in 1844 by Rose, who called it niobium. At present the former name is the one chiefly used in the United States, the latter in other countries.

co-lum'boid (-boid), a. [L. columba dove + -oid.] Zoöl. Pertaining to, or resembling, the pigeons.

col'u-mel'la (kŏl'ū-mĕl'ȧ), n.; pl. -LÆ (-ē). [L., dim. of columen column. See COLUMN.] 1. Bot. a In certain seed plants, a carpophore. See CARPOPHORE, Illust. b In mosses, the axis of the sporogonium, consisting of sterile tissue. c A similar axis in the sporangia of certain fungi.
2. Anat. & Zoöl. Any of various parts likened to a column; as: a The epipterygoid bone of the skull of many lizards (col'u-mel'la cra'ni-i [krā'nĭ-ī]) [NL.]. b The bony or partly cartilaginous rod, often composed of several distinct parts, connecting the tympanic membrane with the internal ear in birds and many reptiles and amphibians (col'u-mel'la au'ris [ô'rĭs]) [NL.]. c The bony central axis of the cochlea. d The central column or axis of a spiral univalve shell. e The central pillar in the calyx of many corals, etc.
3. Arch. A colonnette or baluster.

col'u-mel'lar (kŏl'ū-mĕl'ȧr), a. [L. columellaris pillar-shaped.] Zoöl. Of or pertaining to a columella; columelliform columellar lip, Zoöl., the internal lip of a gastropod shell.

Col'u-mel'li-a (-mĕl'ĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., after L. J. M. Columella, Roman agricultural writer.] Bot. A genus of bitter evergreen shrubs including two Peruvian species, constituting the family Columelliaceæ (order Polemoniales), and having small yellow pentamerous flowers with two stamens. They are used locally as a cure for fever.

Col'u-mel'li-a'ce-æ (-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. See COLUMELLIA. — col'lu-mel'li-a'ceous (-shŭs), a.

col'umn (kŏl'ŭm), n. [L. columna, fr. columen, culmen, fr. cellere (in comp.), akin to E. excel, hill. See HILL; cf. COLONEL.] 1. Arch. A kind of supporting pillar, esp.: a One consisting of shaft, base, and capital, the shaft being of circular section except as it is fluted or channeled. Egyptian and Grecian Doric columns have no bases. When the column is not free, with the shafts completely cylindrical, it is called an engaged column. Columns are classified by the styles of architecture to which they belong, as Egyptian, Greek, etc. See also ORDER, for further classifying and Illust. Among the most famous honorary and symbolic columns are, in London, Nelson's Column; in Paris, the Column of July and the Column Vendôme; in Rome, the columns of St. Mark and St. Theodore; in Rome, of Trajan, Marcus Aurelius, and Phocas; in Alexandria, of Pompey; in Constantinople, of Arcadius and Theodosius. Such columns usually support a bronze or gilded statue of the person they commemorate, as that of Napoleon on the Column Vendôme, or of Liberty on the Column of July (commemorating the Revolution of 1830). b In iron building, one of the supporting members, whether of wrought or cast iron, often including the whole height from basement to roof, made of many superimposed parts.
2. Anything resembling such a column in form, position, or function; an upright body or mass; as, a column of air, of water, of mercury, etc., a column of smoke.
3. Print. One of two or more upright sections, as of a page or a table, separated by a rule or a blank space; as, a newspaper column; a page with three columns
4. Bot. a The androecium in mallows (Malvaceæ), in which the stamens are monadelphous. b The united androecium and gynoecium in orchids (Orchidaceæ).
5 Anat. & Zoöl. Any of various parts or structures likened to a column or pillar, as the spinal column; a columna; a pillar; esp.: a The body of an actinian, as distinguished from the base and disk. b The stalk of a crinoid. c One of the principal longitudinal bundles of nerve fibers of the white matter of the spinal cord. Those of each side are called anterior, lateral, and posterior, the median fissures and spinal nerve roots marking their boundaries. They are made up of smaller bundles or tracts, some of the chief of which are often also called columns, as the column of Bur'dach (bo͝or'dăk) [after K. F. Burdach (1776–1847), German physician], the lateral tract of the posterior column; column of Goll (gōl) [after Goll, German anatomist], the tract of the posterior column next to the median septum; column of Turck (türk), next to the anterior median fissure, etc. The column of Lis-sau'er (lĭ-sou'ĕr) is a slender column of white matter between the posterior cornu and the periphery of the spinal cord. Its fibers, arising from the spinal ganglia, pass to higher levels of the cord.
6. Mil. A formation in which the elements are placed one behind another, in distinction from line, in which the elements are placed abreast. The elements may be single soldiers, or twos, fours, platoons, companies, or larger groups. b Nav. A formation in which the ships are placed, or proceed, one behind another or very nearly so. In Great Britain column is called line ahead.
7. Mech. a Calico Printing. A hollow cylinder used in steaming to fix the colors. b Distilling. A vessel having a vertical series of chambers through which steam passes.
8. Arith A perpendicular line of figures or other symbols.
Syn. — See PILLAR.
column of Clarke [after J. A. L. Clarke (1817–80), English anatomist], a group of nerve cells in the spinal cord at the junction of the posterior root and gray commissure, most marked in the thoracic region. — columns of Bertin (bâr'tăn') [after E. J. Bertin (1712–80), French anatomist], the masses of cortical tissue extending between the sides of the Malpighian pyramids of the kidney as far as the pelvis.

‖ co-lum'na (kŏ-lŭm'nȧ), n.; pl. -NÆ (-nē). [L.] A column.
Co-lum'na Bel'li-ca (bĕl'ĭ-kȧ) [L.], Rom. Antiq., lit., column of war See BELLONA. — c na'si (nā'sī) [L.], Anat., the edge or border of the nasal septum. — co-lum'næ car'ne-æ (kär'nē-ē) [NL.], thick strands of muscular tissue attached to the inner walls of the ventricles of the heart. Some merely form ridges on the walls; others are free except at the ends; still others, called co-lum'næ pa'pil-la'res (păp'ĭ-lā'rēz) [NL.], or papillary muscles, are attached at one end and at the other terminate in the chordæ tendineæ. — co-lum'na ros-tra'ta (rŏs-trā'tȧ) [L., beaked column], a column decorated with ships' prows or the like; esp. [cap.], the Roman column in honor of Gaius Duilius and his naval victory over the Carthaginians, 260 B. C.

co-lum'nar (kŏ-lŭm'när), a. [L columnaris.] 1 Formed in columns; having the form of a column or columns, like the shaft of a column.
2. Of, pertaining to, or characterized by, columns.
columnar epithelium, Anat., epithelium consisting of, or having the superficial layer composed of, tall, narrow, more or less cylindrical or prismatic cells. A simple columnar epithelium occurs in the human digestive tract from the esophageal end of the stomach to the anus, and in many other places. — columnar structure. a Min. A structure made up of slender columns, as in some amphibole. b Geol. A structure consisting of more or less regular columns, usually six-sided. The columns are often fractured transversely, with a cup joint, showing a concave surface above. This structure is characteristic of certain igneous rocks, as basalt, and is due to contraction in cooling.

col'umned (kŏl'ŭmd), a. Having columns; made into, or like, a column; formed in columns; columnar.

The shade and stillness of the columned woods. Parkman.

co-lum'ni-a'tion (kŏ-lŭm'nĭ-ā'shŭn), n. Arch. The employment or system of arrangement of columns in a structure. Buildings or parts thereof characterized by the structural use of free columns, esp. Greek and Roman temples, are classified according to their columniation as follows. a By the presence, position, and number of porticoes, as prostyle, having its columns in a front portico only, and across the full front (Fig. 1) as distinguished from in antis (Fig. 9, and see ANTA); amphiprostyle, having its columns in such porticoes, and at each end only (Fig. 2), amphistylar, having such porticoes either at both ends or on both sides (Fig. 2); pseudoprostyle, falsely or imperfectly prostyle, having the portico columns less than an intercolumniation from the front wall, or engaged in it; peristylar or peripteral, having a row of columns all around (Figs. 4 & 5); pseudoperipteral, falsely or imperfectly peripteral, having the lateral or lateral and rear columns engaged (Fig. 6); dipteral, having a double row all around (Fig. 7); pseudodipteral, falsely or imperfectly dipteral, having the space but not the columns for the inner row (Fig. 8), or having the inner row engaged; apteral, having one or both end porticoes, but no lateral columns (Figs. 1, 2); monopteral (of circular buildings), having a single ring of supporting columns, without a cella (Fig. 3). b By the number of columns across the front, as distyle, having two such columns; tetrastyle, having four (Figs. 1, 2); pentastyle, five (rare); hexastyle, six (Figs. 5, 6); heptastyle, seven (rare); octastyle, eight (Figs. 4, 7, 8); enneastyle, nine; decastyle, ten; dodecastyle, twelve. c By the spacing between columns, as araeostyle, etc. See INTERCOLUMNIATION. d Most of these terms are used also as nouns designating a temple, portico, etc., of the given structure, though special forms, as prostylos, tetrastylos, monopteron, etc., are sometimes used.

Various forms of Columniation

column rule. Print. The rule used between the columns of a page, usually as being of comparatively thick body and of exact column length.

co-lure' (kō-lūr'; kŏ'lūr), n.; pl. COLURES (-lūrz'; -lŭrz). [L. coluri, pl., fr. Gr. κόλουροι dock-tailed, αἱ κόλουροι (sc. γραμμαί lines) the colures; fr. κόλος docked, stunted + οὐρά tail; — so named because in ordinary latitudes a part is always beneath the horizon.] Astron. & Geog. Either of two great circles of the celestial sphere intersecting at the poles, and called for distinction (1) the equinoctial colure (passing through the equinoctial points), and (2) the solstitial colure (at right angles to the former).

Thrice the equinoctial line
He circled; four times crossed the car of night
From pole to pole, traversing each colure. Milton.

co-lu'te-a (kŏ-lū'tē-ă), n. [NL., fr. Gr. κολουτέα, κολοιτία, a pod-bearing tree.] Bot. A small genus of fabaceous shrubs ranging throughout southern Europe and central Asia. C. arborescens, the bladder senna, is common in cultivation. The leaves and seeds are purgative.

co'ly (kō'lĭ), n.; pl. COLIES (-lĭz). [NL. colius, prob. fr. Gr. κολιός a kind of woodpecker.] Any of a small group of peculiar nonpasserine African birds with a long tail, called mouse birds from the manner in which they creep about the branches of trees. They constitute the genus Colius, and the family Coliidæ.

Long-tailed Coly (Colius macrourus).

col'za (kŏl'zə), n. [F., fr. D. koolzaad, prop., cabbage seed; kool (akin to E. cole) + zaad (akin to E. seed).] a A variety of cabbage. = COLE. b Coleseed or rapeseed. See RAPE.

com-. A prefix from the Latin preposition cum, signifying with, together, in conjunction, very, etc. It is used in the form com- before b, m, p, and sometimes f, and by assimilation becomes col- before l, cor- before r, and con- before any consonant except b, h, l, m, p, r, and w. Before a vowel com- becomes co-; also before h, w, and sometimes before other consonants. See co-.

co'ma (kō'mə), n. [NL., fr. Gr. κῶμα lethargy; cf. κοιμᾶν to put to sleep.] A state of profound insensibility, caused by disease, injury, or poison, from which it is difficult or impossible to rouse a person.

co'ma, n.; pl. COMÆ (kō'mē). [L., hair, fr. Gr. κόμη.] 1. Astron. A nebulous mass surrounding the nucleus of a comet, and with it constituting the comet's head. 2. Bot. A tuft or bunch; as: a The assemblage of branches forming the head of a tree. b A cluster of empty bracts terminating an inflorescence, as in the pineapple. c A tuft of hairs on certain seeds, as those of cotton or milkweed. 3. A blur of light extending from and partly surrounding an image produced by a lens, due to lateral spherical aberration.

co'mal (kō'măl), a. Bot. Of or pertaining to a coma.

Co-man'che (kŏ-măn'chē), n. An Indian of a warlike tribe of nomads of Shoshonean stock formerly ranging from the Arkansas River south to Mexico, but now with the Kiowas in Oklahoma.

Co-man'che-an (-ăn), a. [From Comanche, town and county, Texas.] Geol. Pertaining to or designating a period of the Mesozoic between the Jurassic and the (Upper) Cretaceous, and also the system of rocks deposited during this period; — called also Lower Cretaceous and Shastan. See GEOLOGY, Chart. The great expansion of reptiles was the most striking feature of the animal life, and the appearance and spread of angiosperms the most notable fact connected with plant life. — Co-man'che-an, n.

co-man'ic (kŏ-măn'ĭk), a. Chem. Pertaining to or designating a crystalline acid, $C_5H_3O_2CO_2H$, prepared from comenic acid or chelidonic acid. It is a carboxylic derivative of pyrone.

Com'a-rum (kŏm'ă-rŭm), n. [NL., fr. Gr. κόμαρος the arbutus.] Bot. A north temperate genus of rosaceous herbs. C. palustre, the only species, is called bog strawberry, purple cinquefoil, marsh cinquefoil, and cowberry. It has pinnate, prominently stipitate leaves, and purple flowers.

co'mate' (kō'māt'; kō'māt'), n. [co- + mate.] A companion; mate. Shak.

com'a-tose (kŏm'ă-tōs; kō'mă-; 277), a [From COMA lethargy.] Relating to or resembling coma; drowsy; lethargic; as, comatose sleep — com'a-tose'ly, adv. — com'a-tose'ness, n. — com'a-tos'i-ty (-tŏs'ĭ-tĭ), n.

co-mat'u-la (kŏ-măt'ū-lă), n.; L. pl. -LÆ (-lē). [NL., fr. L. comatulus having hair neatly curled. See COMATE, a.] Zoöl. A crinoid of the genus Antedon (syn. Comatula) and related genera. When young they are fixed by a stem. When adult they become detached and cling to seaweeds, etc., by their dorsal cirri. Called also feather star.

coma vigil. Med. A diseased condition of the nervous system marked by profound prostration associated with partial unconsciousness.

comb (kōm), n. [AS. camb; akin to Sw., Dan., & D. kam, Icel. kambr, G. kamm, Gr. γομφιος a grinder tooth, Skr. jambha tooth. Cf. CAM.] 1. An instrument consisting of a thin strip, as of metal, bone, wood, etc., with a row of teeth on one or both edges or sides, used for adjusting, cleaning, or confining the hair, or for adornment. 2. A toothed instrument for currying hairy animals, or cleansing and smoothing their coats; a currycomb. 3. The fleshy crest or caruncle on the head of the domestic fowl and certain other gallinaceous birds, usually best developed in the male. Many of the grouse have a small comb over each eye. In the domestic fowl it varies greatly in different breeds. Its typical form, called a single comb, is a median serrated crest, which may be erect or pendant. The pea comb, found in the Brahma fowls, consists of three low, somewhat serrated crests side by side, the middle one being the highest. The rose comb, as those of Hamburgs, has a flattened caplike form tapering behind into an extension or spike, and studded on top with tubercles. The leaf comb, occurring in Houdans, Polish, etc., is a flattened, transverse comb; if produced into laterally projecting spikes it is sometimes called antlered. The strawberry comb, as in Malays, is low, rounded, and set well forward. 4. A thing resembling a cock's comb; as: a A crest attributed to certain serpents; also, a ridge or crest of hair. b The crest of a helmet, esp. the upright blade on a morion. c The thumb piece of the hammer of a gunlock; also, the sharp upper forward part of the butt of a gun next the cheek in firing. d A ridge of ground, as that between cart ruts, or that of a narrow hill. e The ridge of a roof. f The curling crest of a wave. 5. Any of various toothed instruments; as: a One for separating and cleansing wool, flax, hair, etc. b The serrated vibratory doffing knife of a carding machine. c A former, commonly cone-shaped, used in hat manufacturing for hardening the soft fiber into a bat. d Mech. A chaser. e The notched scale of a wire micrometer. f The collector of an electrical machine. g House Painting. An instrument used in graining. h A tool used in marbling paper. 6. A honeycomb, or one of the somewhat similar masses of cells built by wasps. 7. Zoöl. Any of various comblike organs, as: a The pecten of a bird's eye. b The swimming organs of ctenophores. c An organ on the legs of some insects, used for cleaning purposes. d An organ of uncertain, perhaps sensory, function on the sternum of the second abdominal segment of scorpions and related animals. 8. A long and narrow ridge or hill with steep sides, esp. one of gravel and sand. 9. Geol. & Mining. A layer in a vein or geode, composed mainly of crystals, and exhibiting, when exposed, a surface formed by their terminal faces. 10. The purple coneflower. Local, U. S.

comb (kōm), v. t.; COMBED (kōmd), COMB'ING. 1. To disentangle, cleanse, or adjust, with a comb; to lay smooth and straight with or as with a comb; as, to comb hair or wool. See COMBING.

comber board. Weaving. In a loom, a perforated wooden co-lum'nat-ed (kŏ-lŭm'nāt-ĕd; kŏl'ŭm-nāt'ĕd), a. Columned.

column bone Zoöl The epitherygoid bone

col'um-nif'er-ous (kŏl'ŭm-nĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a See -FEROUS; — used chiefly in botany.

co-lum'ni-form (kŏ-lŭm'nĭ-fôrm), a Of columnar form.

column lathe. A lathe on a vertical extensible post, used by watchmakers and dentists column pipe A vertical pipe through which water is pumped to a higher level.

colup ✝ COLLOP.

colur. ✝ COLOR.

col'u-te'in (kŏl'ū-tē'ĭn), n. Chem. Designating a crystalline acid in bladder senna (Colutea).

col'u-to'ri-um (-tō'rĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.] = COLLUTORY.

colvere, colvre. ✝ CULVER.

col'ward, a [Cf. OF. culvert.] Perfidious; infamously wicked Obs col'wort. ✝ COLEWORT.

Co-lym'bi-for'mes (kŏ-lĭm'bĭ-fôr'mēz), n. pl [NL.; Gr. κόλυμβος diver + L. forma form.] Zoöl An order of birds consisting of the loons and grebes.

col'ym-bi'on (kŏl'ĭm-bī'ŏn), n. [See COLUMBEION.] East. Ch. A vessel for holy water.

Co-lym'bus (-bŭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. κόλυμβος a diver] Zoöl A genus of grebes (see GREBE). This name has also been often used as the generic name of the loons, the loon family being then termed Co-lym'bi-dæ (-bĭ-dē).

colyshe. ✝ CULLIS, a broth.

co-lyt'ic (kŏ-lĭt'ĭk), a [Gr κωλυτικός hindering, preventive.] Inhibitory; obstructive; antiseptic; as, colytic agents.

colza oil. = RAPE OIL. [COMB. form Obs. or dial. var. of COMB.]

Com., or com Abbr. Comedy; comic; comma; Commander; Commentary; commerce; commercial; Commission; Commissioner; Committee; Commodore; common; commoner; commonly; commune; community; communicate. communicated; communication.

co-mag'is-tra-cy, n. See CO-, 3 a.

com'a-mie (kŭm'ă-mĭ), n. [Cf. COAL, CULM coal.] A young coalfish. Obs. or Scot.

Co-man' (kō-măn'), n. The language of the medieval Kipchak khanate. See KIPCHAK, URAL-ALTAIC.

Co-man'che (kō-măn'chē), n. Geol. The Comanchean; orginally, that of Texas.

co'marb (kō'märb), co-mar'ba (kō-mar'bə), n. Corrupts of COARB. — co'marb-ship, n.

Com. Arr. Abbr. Committee of Arrangements.

co-mart' (kō-märt'), n. Covenant; — the 1605 quarto reading of Shakespeare's Hamlet, I. 1. 93, probably a misprint.

co-ma'ta. ✝ COMET.

co-math'er Var. of COMETHER.

com'a-tous (kŏm'ă-tŭs, kō'mă-), a. Comatose.

co-mat'u-lid (kō-măt'ū-lĭd), n. Zoöl. A comatula.

comb. Var. of COOMB. See MEASURE.

comb. Dial. Eng. var. of COOM

com-bar'on, n [com- + baron] A fellow baron.

com'bat-a-ble (kŏm'băt-ă-b'l; kŭm'-; kŏm-băt'ă-b'l), a. [Cf. F. combattable] See -ABLE.

comb'-brush', n. 1. A brush for 2. A lady's maid. Obs.

combe (kōm; kōōm). Var. of COOMB, a valley; obs. var. of COOMB, a measure.

com'bel (kŏm'bĕl), n. Also com'ble. [F. comble.] Her. A diminutive of the chief, one half, or less than one half, its depth; a fillet.

com'ber (kŏm'bẽr), n. a The frame through which the lower ends of the harness cords are passed to keep them separate.

comb grain. In lumber, grain of plainly marked narrow stripes of darker and lighter color, parallel and nearly straight, as in certain yellow pines of the southern United States. This is considered a mark of sound material.

com'bi-nant (kŏm'bĭ-nănt; kŏm-bīn'ănt; 277), n. [From 1st COMBINE, v. t.] Math. a An invariant of a system of quantics of the same degree, unaffected (except by a constant multiplier) by putting for any quantic a linear function of all the quantics (Sylvester, 1853). b In Sophus Lie's group theory, the infinitesimal operation (or linear differential operator) $X.Y-Y.X$, denoted by (XY), where X and Y are any two infinitesimal operations of a finite group. It is important as leading coefficient in a certain expansion.

com'bi-nan-tive (kŏm'bĭ-năn-tĭv; kŏm-bīn'ăn-tĭv), a. Math. Involving combinants or characterized by their properties. — combinantive covariant, Math., a covariant of a system of quantics unaffected (unless by a constant factor) by putting linear functions of the quantics for the quantics themselves.

com'bi-na'tion (-nā'shŭn), n. [LL. combinatio. See COMBINE.] 1. Act or process of combining, or state of being combined. "Images in the same combination." Johnson.

Making new compounds by new combinations. Boyle.

2. Result of combining; a union or aggregate made by combining one thing with another; specif., a union of mechanical parts or elements so that they cooperate to produce a practical result or effect.

3. Specif.: A union of persons; esp., a union or alliance of persons or states to effect some purpose; — formerly chiefly used as implying an intent to effect a purpose contrary to law. Now, usually, a union of persons to effect some purpose of an industrial or other economic nature, as in the case of syndicates, trusts, labor unions, or employers' associations, aiming to regulate production, distribution, sale, etc., in which the feature of illegality is still frequently to be seen; as, combinations in restraint of trade.

A combination of the most powerful men in Rome who had conspired my ruin. Melmoth

4. pl. Math. The different sets into which a number of individuals, as letters, may be grouped. In combinations the order in which the objects are arranged in each group is indifferent, while in variations and permutations it is essential; thus abc and bca are different permutations, but the same combination.

5. Biol. A binomial name; specif., one formed by combining a specific name with a different generic name from that under which an organism was originally described.

☞ An author who transfers a species to a different genus is said to be the author of the combination, the original publisher being author of the species alone.

6. Pool. A combination shot.

7. The series of letters or numbers in given succession chosen in setting a combination lock; also, the mechanism operating or moved by the series.

8. Sports. A series of bets, or a single bet on a number of happenings, the odds given being based on the odds on each event and according to the theory of probabilities.

Syn. — Alliance, association, union, league, confederacy, coalition, clique, coterie, camarilla, gang. — COMBINATION, COMBINE, PARTY, FACTION, CABAL, JUNTO. Combination and party may or may not be opprobrious terms; faction, cabal, and junto commonly are. A COMBINATION (see AGGREGATE) is a union, either of individuals or of organized interests, for mutual support in urging demands or resisting claims; as, a combination of coal consumers against an increase in prices, a combination of railroads to maintain existing rates. COMBINE is a colloquialism, esp. in U. S., for combination; as, the coal combine. A PARTY is a number of persons united in support of some opinion, cause, or principle; it usually implies a similar body in opposition; as, "He who draws his pen for one party must expect to make enemies of the other" (Dryden); "Who [Burke], born for the universe, narrowed his mind, and to party gave up what was meant for mankind" (Goldsmith). FACTION (see FACTIOUS) frequently suggests a smaller body than party, and commonly implies selfish ends and the use of unscrupulous or turbulent means; as, "So several factions from this first ferment work up to foam and threat the government" (Dryden); "The Whigs and Tories in Rome, Athens, and Jerusalem never forgot national points with more zeal, to attend to private faction, than we have lately" (Walpole). A CABAL is a small and secret combination, seeking private or sinister ends by scheming or intrigue; as, "Mr. Philips . . . [said] that I was entered into a cabal with Dean Swift and others to write against the whig interest, and in particular to undermine his own reputation, and that of his friends Steele and Addison" (Pope); cf., "The gossip and the cabals of those Anglicized coteries" (Byron). JUNTO often er than cabal suggests intrigue for party or political, as well as for private, ends; as, the Cuban junto. See ALLIANCE, CONSPIRACY, ASSOCIATION, COMPANY, COTERIE, UNION, COMPOSITE.

combination by volume, Chem., the act, process, or ratio by which gaseous elements and compounds unite in definite proportions by volume to form distinct compounds. — c. by weight, Chem., act, process, or ratio in which substances unite (in compounds) in proportions by weight, relatively fixed and exact. See LAW OF DEFINITE PROPORTIONS.

com'bi-na'tion-al (kŏm'bĭ-nā'shŭn-ăl), a. Of or pertaining to combination; having the quality of combining.

combinational analysis. = COMBINATORIAL ANALYSIS. — c. tone or note, Acous., a tone produced by the combination of the vibrations of two tones in the same air space (usually within the ear); — called also resultant tone, Tartini's tone. It may be either a summation tone (called also summational tone) or a difference tone (called also differential tone or grave harmonic), as its pitch is equal to the sum or difference of the frequencies of the tones which produce it.

combination lock. A lock in which the mechanism is controlled by means of a movable dial (sometimes by several dials or rings) inscribed with letters or figures. The bolt of the lock cannot be turned until after the dial has been so turned as to combine the characters in a certain order or succession.

combination pedal. Music. An organ pedal which draws or withdraws several stops at once.

combination rubber. Mech. Sheet rubber with a linen web or webs through it, used to pack pipe joints, etc.

combination shot. Pool. A shot in which a ball is pocketed by playing another object ball to strike it.

com'bi-na-tive (kŏm'bĭ-nā-tĭv, kŏm-bīn'ā-tĭv; 277), a. Tending or able to effect combination; marked by, pertaining to, or resulting from, combination; specif., Math., combinatorial.

com'bi-na-to'ri-al (kŏm'bĭ-nā-tō'rĭ-ăl; kŏm-bīn'ā-), a. Math. Of or pertaining to combinations. — combinatorial analysis, Math., the general doctrine of the distribution of objects into classes, — of late years (since 1846) expanded into a complicate and extremely abstruse body of knowledge.

com-bine' (kŏm-bīn'), v. t.; COM-BINED' (-bīnd'), COM-BIN'-ING (-bīn'ĭng). [LL. combinare, combinatum; L. com- + binus, pl. bini, two and two, double: cf. F. combiner. See BINARY.] 1. To unite or join; to link closely together; to bring into harmonious union; specif., to cause to unite into a chemical compound.

Earthly sounds, though sweet and well combined. Cowper.

2. To possess or exhibit in combination.

3. To bind; to hold, as by a moral tie. Obs.

I am combined by a sacred vow Shak.

Syn. — Unite, consolidate, amalgamate. See JOIN.

com-bine', v. i. 1. To form a union; to agree; coalesce; confederate. "You with your foes combine." Dryden.

So sweet did harp and voice combine. Scott.

2. Chem. To unite in definite proportions by weight to form a distinct compound.

3. Card Playing. In cassino, to build.

com-bine' (kŏm-bīn'; commonly kŏm'bīn), n. Act of combining; usually, a combination of persons to effect some commercial, industrial, or political object, — usually in a bad sense and implying illegality or fraud. Colloq., U. S.

Syn. — See COMBINATION.

com-bined' (kŏm-bīnd'), p. a. 1. United; formed by combination; joined together, as confederates; formed into a compound, as chemical elements.

2. Performed by agents in combination. — com-bin'ed-ly (kŏm-bīn'ĕd-lĭ), adv — com-bin'ed-ness, n.

combined carbon, in iron and steel, that portion of the carbon which is chemically united in the form of carbides, as distinguished from graphitic carbon. — c. experience table. See MORTALITY TABLE. — c. method (of teaching deaf-mutes), a system combining oral and written instruction with the manual method.

comb'ing (kōm'ĭng), n. 1. Act or process of using a comb or combs.

☞ The process of combing is used in straightening wool of long staple; short wool is carded.

2. Produce of combing; — chiefly pl. Specif.: a That which is caught or collected with a comb, as loose, tangled hair. b Hair arranged to be worn on the head.

combing machine. Textile Manuf. A machine for combing wool, flax, cotton, etc., and separating the longer and more valuable fiber from the shorter. See also CARDING MACHINE. — c. wool, wool adapted for being combed.

com-bin'ing (kŏm-bīn'ĭng), p. pr. & vb. n. of COMBINE.

combining form, a word form, as a prefix or suffix, used in compounds, as hydro-, phyto-, auto-, etc. — c. power, Chem., the ability of the elements to combine with one another to form compounds; frequently, the degree of this ability; valence. See VALENCE. — c. weight, Chem., that proportional weight, referred to some standard, and for each element fixed and exact, by which an element unites with another to form a distinct compound. The combining weights either are identical with, or are multiples or submultiples of, the atomic weight. See ATOMIC WEIGHT; EQUIVALENT, 2 b.

comb pot. A device for heating a wool comb over a stove, commonly consisting of two flat plates with room between for the teeth of the comb.

Com'bre-ta'ce-æ (kŏm'brē-tā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. See COMBRETUM.] Bot. A family of trees and shrubs (order Myrtales), having flowers with an indefinite number of stamens and often apetalous. It contains about 15 genera and 250 species, chiefly tropical; Combretum and Terminalia are the most important. Some plants of this family have the habit of the mangrove. The astringent fruits of many genera of the family yield the myrobalans of commerce, whence it is sometimes called the myrobalan family.

Com-bre'tum (kŏm-brē'tŭm), n. [L., a kind of rush.] Bot. A large genus of tropical and subtropical trees and shrubs typifying the family Combretaceæ. Many species have handsome white, red, or yellow flowers, and are cultivated in greenhouses; some yield tannin and various dyes.

com-bur'gess (kŏm-bûr'jĕs), n. [com- + burgess.] Hist. a A fellow burgess. b Formerly, in certain English boroughs, one of a number of elected magistrates who were associated with the alderman.

com-bust' (kŏm-bŭst'), a. [L. combustus, p. p. of comburere to burn up; com- + burere (in comp.), of uncertain origin; cf. bustum funeral pyre: cf. OF. combust.] Obs.

1. Burnt; consumed. Chaucer.

2. Astrol. So near the sun as to be obscured or overpowered by his light, as the moon or planets when not more than eight degrees and a half from the sun. Milton.

com-bus'ti-bil'i-ty (kŏm-bŭs'tĭ-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n. Quality or state of being combustible.

com-bus'ti-ble (kŏm-bŭs'tĭ-b'l), a. [Cf F. combustible.] 1. Capable of undergoing combustion; apt to catch fire; inflammable.

Sin is to the soul like fire to combustible matter South.

2. Easily kindled or excited; quick; fiery; irascible.

Arnold was a combustible character Irving.

com-bus'ti-ble, n. A thing that is combustible.

All such combustibles as are cheap enough for common use go under the name of fuel. Ure.

com-bus'tion (-chŭn), n. [L. combustio: cf. F. combustion.] 1. Act or instance of burning.

2. Specif.: Obs. a A conflagration. b Cremation.

3. Chem. a Any chemical process accompanied by the evolution of light and heat, commonly the union of substances with oxygen; hence, slower oxidation, as in the animal body. b In quantitative analysis, the entire operation of burning a measured portion of a substance to be analyzed, and collecting the products.

4. Inflammation. Obs.

5. Violent agitation; confusion; tumult. Lockhart.

There [were] great combustions and divisions among the heads of the university. Mede.

6. Astrol. The obscuration of a star or planet by proximity to the sun. Obs.

7. In the explosion of powder for ballistic purposes, the progressive burning of each grain from surface to center.

combustion chamber. Mech. a A space over, or in front of, a boiler furnace where the gases from the fire become more thoroughly mixed and burnt. b The clearance space in the cylinder of an internal combustion engine where the charge is compressed and ignited.

combustion furnace. Chem. A long, narrow, portable furnace used in the combustion method.

combustion method. Chem. A method for the quantitative determination of carbon, hydrogen, etc., by combustion of the substance with air, oxygen, or some solid oxidizing material, such as copper oxide, and absorption or collection of the gaseous products. It is extensively used for the analysis of organic compounds and also for the determination of carbon in iron and steel.

combustion tube. Chem. A tube capable of withstanding considerable heat, used in the combustion method.

com-bus'tive (kŏm-bŭs'tĭv), a. Tending or able to effect combustion, pertaining to, or marked by, combustion.

comb'y (kōm'ĭ), a. Resembling a comb in structure; favose; honeycombed.

come (kŭm; kōōm), n. [Perh. akin to G. keim germ.] The radicle developed in grain, as barley, during malting; — chiefly pl. Eng., and Chiefly Dial.

come (kŭm), v. i.; pret. CAME (kām); p. p. COME (kŭm); p. pr. & vb. n. COM'ING (kŭm'ĭng). [ME. cumen, comen, AS. cuman; akin to OS. kuman, D. komen, OHG. queman, G. kommen, Icel. koma, Sw. komma, Dan. komme, Goth. qiman, L. venire (for gvenire), Gr. βαίνειν to go, Skr. gam. Cf. BASE, n., CONVENE, ADVENTURE.] 1. To move forward or hitherward; to approach; to pass, or be passing, from one station in space to another which is implied as nearer than the first; — opposed to go. Come may be used without reference to any particular place where the motion begins or ends, in which case the idea of approach is carried by the verb; as, the shots came thick and fast; or a definite place of departure or terminus or both may be implied by the context, or formally expressed, when the verb commonly takes either a preposition (as, to come to, toward, on, upon, before, behind, etc.) or an adverb (as, to come away, off, up, down, forth, forward, etc.).

When we came to Rome. Acts XXVIII 16.

Lately come from Italy. Acts XVIII. 2.

2. To move toward, arrive at, or appear on, a scene of action; to move into or appear in the station of interest, whether this be partly physical or purely ideal; — usually with the sense of purpose, which is ordinarily defined by an infinitive or participle or a coordinate verb introduced by and; as, he came to see us; come and see us; a man came asking after wisdom; or by a prepositional phrase; as, to come to the rescue; come to the bar of judgment.

A Daniel come to judgment. Shak.

I did not come to curse thee. Shak.

3. To move toward or arrive at a station in a series; to approach or arrive in time, sequence, or order; as, day comes; to come of age; to come to the crux of the argument; after joy comes sadness; coming, now, to the next section; also, to approach in kind or quality; as, brute pain comes near to human.

The hour is coming, and now is. John v. 25.

4. To appear as issuing from a source or as entering into being; to appear in the course of a development; to follow, emanate, result (usually with from, of, or into); as, ill comes from ill will; he comes of a sturdy race; to come into bloom. Hence, to reach as a natural consequence; as, to come to blows; come to an understanding.

From whence come wars? James IV. 1.

Then butter does refuse to come. Hudibras.

So quick bright things come to confusion. Shak.

5. To arrive or appear as an event or condition; to happen; befall; occur; as, no harm will come to you; an idea came into his head.

All things come alike to all. Eccl IX. 2

Thy kingdom come. Matt. VI. 10.

Specif.: a To arrive or appear as by chance or unforeseen development; to get to be, or turn out to be; as, to come untied; come true.

How come you thus estranged? Shak.

b To arrive or appear as a possession; as, his wealth comes by inheritance; knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers.

used in a construction analogous to the former use of was (see BE, Note) for a past date; as, "Monday come fortnight," meaning, "a fortnight after (the next) Monday." As in the analogous case of was, the verb is often omitted, hence, such an expression as "Monday fortnight" might signify either a fortnight after or a fortnight before (the next) Monday. Similarly, this construction is used in denoting a future date from which is estimated a past period; as, the accident was a year ago come New Year's.

☞ Often, esp. in poetry, the auxiliary be, rather than have, is used with come, giving to the participle a clearer adjectival significance, expressing state or condition, whereas have expresses the completion of action.

Think not that I am come to destroy Matt. v 17.
We are come off like Romans Shak.

☞ Come in the imperative is used to excite attention, or to stimulate to motion or joint action; come, let us go, also, esp. when repeated, it sometimes expresses haste, or impatience, and sometimes rebuke.

Come, come, no time for lamentation now. Milton.

Syn. — See ARRIVE.

Gr. κωμῳδία; κῶμος a jovial festivity with music and dancing, a festal procession, an ode sung at this procession (perh. akin to κώμη village) + ἀείδειν to sing; for comedy was originally of a lyric character. See ODE.] 1. A drama of light and amusing rather than serious character and typically having a happy ending; also, the dramatic quality characteristic of comedies; the phase of drama expressing the comic or depicting scenes of amusing or cheerful nature; as, bits of comedy are often introduced into tragedies; Molière was a master of the comedy of manners. The comedy of the European stage is directly descended from that of Attica. Critics of the time of Hadrian discriminated in Attic comedy three divisions, since generally recognized. The Old Comedy (about 465–400 B.C.), developed out of the procession of mummers (κῶμος) in connection with the Greater Dionysia, and consisted chiefly of political and social satire, commonly directed at contemporary men and issues. Cratinus, Eupolis, and Aristophanes are representative. The Middle Comedy (400–336 B. C.) is characterized by parodies of literature and travesties of myths and philosophies. Aristophanes, Antiphanes, and Alexis are prominent. The New Comedy is devoted to portrayal of familiar life, and afforded the chief Greek model for the Roman comedy of Plautus and Terence. Menander was the most eminent writer. It was vigorous for only about a century, and with its disappearance from the stage, early in the Christian Era, Greek comedy lost most of its influence until the Renaissance, when modern drama was shaped upon classic models. See COMEDIA, COMŒDIA, MASKED COMEDY; cf. CHORUS, TRAGEDY.

Comedy presents us with the imperfections of human nature; farce entertains us with what is monstrous and chimerical. Dryden.

2. The theory or art of composing or of acting comedies.

3. Matter suitable for treatment in comedy; an amusing and enlivening event having a dramatic turn or suggestion; as, a comedy in politics.

The world is a comedy to those that think, a tragedy to those who feel. Walpole.

4. Any literary composition or series of compositions treating a theme suitable for comedy or after the manner of comedy; — chiefly a term of literary history or criticism, applied sometimes to serious works whose purpose is to portray truth or life without leaving a painful or tragic impression, esp. "The Divine Comedy" of Dante, and "The Human Comedy" (La Comédie Humaine) of Balzac.

come'ling (kŭm'lĭng), n. [come + 1st -ling] A newcomer; an immigrant or a sojourner. Dial. & Archaic. — come'ling, a.

ME kime weak, G. kaum, adv., scarcely) + -līc. See LIKE, a.] 1. Pleasing or agreeable to the sight; fair to look upon; good-looking; handsome. In the Middle Ages comely was applied in courtesy to persons of exalted station, or to the divinity; as, comely queen; comely Christ.

He that is comely when old and decrepit, surely was very beautiful when he was young. South.

2 Gratifying; agreeable. Obs. or Archaic.

3. Suitable or becoming; decent; proper. Obs. or Archaic.

It is good to sing praises unto our God, for it is pleasant; and praise is comely Ps. cxlvii. 1

Syn. — COMELY, BEAUTIFUL. COMELY, in present usage, as applied to persons, is a term of lower praise than BEAUTIFUL; as, "Sarah Drew might be rather called comely than beautiful" (Gay). Comely usually suggests a well-proportioned figure and wholesomeness of aspect; as, "Once a moorland Helen, and still comely as a blood horse and healthy as the hill wind" (Stevenson).

She was always thought comely; and comeliness . . . having not so much to lose as beauty had, would hold, when that would evaporate or fly off. Richardson all peoples regarded with superstitious dread, as presaging calamity. They are now commonly regarded as erratic members of the solar system, usually of very small mass. They move in elongated orbits, some of them approaching very near to the sun and then receding to very great distances. They are invisible except in the nearer part of their orbits. Periodic comets, which return to the sun at fixed intervals, have elliptical orbits (see below); but others move in a parabola or a hyperbola, and so are expected never to return. A comet's head commonly consists of a bright nucleus surrounded by the coma, a luminous fog which sometimes consists in part of one or more envelopes. The tail is an extension of the coma, which grows as the comet approaches perihelion; it is nearly always directed away from the sun. Some meteors appear to be disintegrated remnants of comets (see METEOR). See also BIELA'S COMET.

3. To impart strength and hope to; to cheer; gladden; now, usually, to relieve of mental distress; to allay the grief or trouble of; to encourage; console.
Light exceedeth in comforting the spirits of men. Bacon.
That we may be able to comfort them that are in any affliction 2 Cor 1. 4 (Rev. Ver.).

Syn. — Cheer, revive, encourage, enliven, invigorate, inspirit, refresh, animate, confirm, strengthen. — COMFORT, CONSOLE, SOLACE all presuppose a state of suffering or sorrow. COMFORT, the homelier, more intimate word, suggests relief afforded by imparting positive cheer, hope, or strength, as well as by the diminution of pain; as, "He hath sent me . . . to comfort all that mourn" (Is. lxi. 1-2); "You have an unspeakable comfort of your young prince" (Shak.); a mother comforts her sobbing child. CONSOLE, the more formal term, emphasizes rather the alleviation of grief or the mitigation of the sense of loss than the communication of pleasure; it frequently implies some definite source of relief; as, the presence of his friend consoled him, to console one's self by philosophic reflections; cf. inconsolable for her loss, the consolations of religion. SOLACE frequently suggests relief from weariness, despondency, loneliness, rather than from grief or pain; and the source of solace is more commonly things than persons; as, "When the spirit is sore fretted, even tired to sickness of the janglings and nonsense noises of the world, what a balm and solace it is to go and seat yourself, for a quiet half hour, . . . among the gentle Quakers!" (Lamb); to solace one's self with books. See EASE, PITY.

Tragic or comic, but thou writ'st the play. B. Jonson.
2. Causative of mirth as being humorous, witty, etc.; ludicrous; also, burlesque; funny. "Comic shows." Shak.
Too solemn for the comic touches in them. Tennyson.
Syn. — See LAUGHABLE.
comic opera, a light opera usually having dialogue like comedy between the musical numbers; also, loosely, in modern use, a musical burlesque.
It [comic opera] consists of an intermixture of lightest and most frivolous music with spoken dialogue, and depends as much on its literary sprightliness as on its musical tunefulness for success. Encyc. Brit.

com'ic, n. 1. A comedian. Obs. Steele.
2. Æsthetics. That portion of the amusing and mirth-provoking which appeals to intelligent appreciation and in respect to the means used is felt to be harmoniously fitted to its end and complete in its effect. Plato believed the essence of the comic to lie in a feeling of superiority on the part of the person amused. Aristotle and others have considered some element of contrast, error, or incongruity — as excessive predominance of cause over effect — to be the essential. Later writers have sought to explain it by association, physiological reaction from tension, etc.

com'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. 1. Relating to or befitting comedy; hence, specif., trivial; low; base. Obs.
They deny it to be tragical because its catastrophe is a wedding, which hath ever been accounted comical. Gay.
2. Excitive of mirth; droll; laughable.
The dog was so very comical that I was obliged to throw myself back upon my chair and fairly laugh it out. Johnson.

co-mi'ti-a (kō-mĭsh'ĭ-ȧ), n. pl. [L.] 1. Rom Antiq. An assembly of the people to act on matters submitted to them by duly authorized officials. These assemblies were of three kinds. a Co-mi'ti-a cu'ri-a'ta (kū'rĭ-ā'tȧ), or assembly of the curiæ, the most ancient and during the regal period the only assembly of the people. It met in the Comitium. It was convoked to elect and confer sovereignty on a king, to hear provocations (appeals), to hear announcements affecting the calendar, to act upon matters affecting rogations, wills, declarations of war, and esp. adlection (appointment or promotion of a person to a higher office without his having held a required lower office), restitution, arrogation, and detestatio sacrorum, jurisdiction over which it retained after its other functions were lost. Though the plebeians appear to have been included in the comitia curiata, they appear not to have gained the right to vote until the middle of the republican period. b Co-mi'ti-a cen-tu'ri-a'ta (sĕn-tū'rĭ-ā'tȧ), or assembly of centuries, orig. a military assembly based upon the reorganization of the army on a property basis and during the regal period having no political functions. About 241 B. C. it was reorganized on a tribal basis. It met usually in the Campus Martius, voted by centuries, and was more democratic in its organization than the comitia curiata, whose political and judicial functions it soon largely acquired, with certain powers of legislation and the right to elect the higher magistrates. After 287 B. C., however, it declined rapidly in favor of the concilium plebis (which see) and the comitia tributa. c Co-mi'ti-a tri-bu'ta (trĭ-bū'tȧ), or tribal assembly, which came into existence about 447 B. C., was composed of both patricians and plebeians, met usually in the Forum, was presided over by a magistrate, and voted by tribes. This body elected the lower magistrates, as the quæstors and curule ædiles, could legislate on any subject, and heard certain judicial cases, conducted by the curule ædile. A modified form of this assembly elected the pontifex maximus, and later (after 104 B. C.) the priests, augurs, etc. The three comitia still existed under the early empire, but their action was only formal. Their meetings were designated, according to the magistrates who were to be chosen, co-mi'ti-a com'mu-la'ri-a (kŏm'mū-lā'rĭ-ȧ), co-mi'ti-a præ-to'ri-a (prē-tō'rĭ-ȧ), co-mi'ti-a tri'bu-ni'ci-a (trĭb'ū-nĭsh'ĭ-ȧ), co-mi'ti-a quæ-sto'ri-a (kwēs-tō'rĭ-ȧ), etc. Stated meetings of the comitia curiata or comitia centuriata were called co-mi'ti-a ca-la'ta (ka-lā'tȧ), i. e., summoned comitia, and were for any one of several purposes: (1) To consecrate or inaugurate a priest or a king. (2) In the early period, to witness wills. (3) To hear announcements as to the calendar. (4) To grant the detestatio sacrorum, a ceremony or rite of uncertain character, but generally taken to have been the form of release from the clan sacra.
2. An assembly. Rare.
3. [cap.] Formerly, at Oxford University, England, the principal assemblage during the Act, corresponding to the modern Encænia.

co-mi'tial (kō-mĭsh'ăl), a. [L. comitialis.] Of or pertaining to the Roman comitia, or, formerly, various public assemblies, as the Oxford Comitia, certain 16th-century Presbyterian synods, etc. — comitial ill or sickness, epilepsy, the occurrence of which at the Roman comitia was an ill omen that broke up the assembly.

Co-mi'ti-um (kō-mĭsh'ĭ-ŭm), n.; pl. -TIA (-ä). [L.; com- + ire, itum, to go.] In ancient Rome, the place at the foot of the Capitol, between the Rostra and the Senate House, where the comitia and law courts convened.
In the early days of Rome the Comitium was the center of civil and political business, while the Forum was used simply as a market place R. Lanciani.

‖ co'mi-ti'va (kō'mē-tē'vä), n. [It.] A body of followers; — applied to the lawless or brigand bands in Italy and Sicily.

Gram. & Pros.* a A short phrase or word group less than a colon; a fragment of a few words or feet. b Either part of a dactylic hexameter as divided by the cæsura; also, the cæsura itself.

2. Rhet. A clause or short division of a composition. Obs.

3. Punctuation. A point [now,] used to mark the smallest structural divisions of a sentence. In present usage it primarily makes clear the grammatical grouping, rather than indicates rhetorical pauses, and is generally employed: (1) To set off words, phrases, and clauses that are independent, parenthetical, or appositional; as, "Hail, Cæsar!" "Practice, however, perfected his skill." "And he, their prince, shall rank among my peers." (2) To indicate omitted words; as, "Mishap might divide them; mistrust, never." Hence in dates and addresses, etc., as, "Monday, May 1, 1905." (3) To separate words and phrases of like construction used in a series; as, "the virtues of faith, hope, and charity." (4) To mark off phrases and clauses of a complex or compound sentence, when long; when suffering change of subject; when themselves used as the subject; or when slightly parenthetical, as conditional or relative (not restrictive) clauses often are. — "He said, 'Use it before a short, direct quotation.'" "To follow without question any dogmatic rule, is risky in practice." "Clearness of structure to the eye, which the comma is used to insure, may often be sufficient in these cases with the comma left out." But — "That clearness which the comma," etc.

☞ The comma is used also to separate figures and symbols, as in mathematics, chemical formulæ, etc. See also QUOTATION MARK.

4. Hence, fig, a slight separation or pause. "And stand a comma 'tween their amities." Shak.

6. = COMMEND. Obs.

Syn. — Bid, dictate, charge, require, prescribe. — COMMAND, ORDER, ENJOIN, DIRECT, INSTRUCT. COMMAND and ORDER agree in stressing the idea of authority, command implying its more formal and official, order, its more peremptory, sometimes even arbitrary, exercise; as, a king, a military officer, the captain of a ship, commands; a landowner orders a trespasser off his premises; one is apt to resent being ordered, except by those who have a right to command. But order is used of a physician's directions with no such connotation; as, the doctor ordered outdoor exercise; cf., also, orders to a tradesman. ENJOIN, DIRECT, and INSTRUCT are all less imperative than command or order. Enjoin adds to the idea of authority the implication of pressing admonition; direct and instruct (see INSTRUCTION) suggest rather business, official, or diplomatic relations, direct being perhaps the more mandatory, instruct the more formal, of the two; as, a parent enjoins obedience, the church enjoins certain duties; a superior in office directs his subordinates to perform a given task; a judge instructs a jury, a political convention instructs its delegates. See MANDATE, GOVERN, CHIEF.

See MERCHANT.] 1. Business intercourse; esp., the exchange or buying and selling of commodities, and particularly, the exchange of merchandise on a large scale between different places or communities; extended trade or traffic. The earlier word used was merchandise. Cf. COMMERCIUM.
The public becomes powerful in proportion to the opulence and extensive commerce of private men Hume.
Commerce, undoubtedly, is traffic, but it is something more it is intercourse. . . . The mind can scarcely conceive a system for regulating commerce between nations, which shall . . be confined to prescribing rules for the conduct of individuals in the actual employment of buying and selling, or of barter.
9 Wheat. 1, 189
All the commerce that you have had with Troy. Shak.
2. Social intercourse, dealings between persons or groups of persons in society; interchange of ideas, sentiments, etc., as between man and man; formerly, also, communication; channel of intercourse.

Syn.—COMMIT, INTRUST, CONFIDE, CONSIGN, RELEGATE.—COMMIT is the widest term; it may express merely the general idea of delivering into another's charge (as, to commit the management of an estate to an agent), or it may have the special sense of an absolute transfer to a superior power or final custody; as, "Into thine hand I commit my spirit" (Ps. xxxi. 5); "We therefore commit his body to the ground; earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust" (Bk. of Com. Prayer). To INTRUST is to commit with trust and confidence; to CONFIDE is to intrust with entire reliance and assurance; as, to intrust one with a secret, with the care of a child; to confide to a friend the execution of one's dying wish. CONSIGN implies a more formal act, and frequently suggests such transfer or delivery as removes its object from one's immediate control; as, to consign goods to an agent for sale; "The family mansion had been consigned to the charge of a kinsman, who was allowed to make it his home for the time being" (Hawthorne); "He must now . . . consign him to a living tomb again" (id.). To RELEGATE is to consign to some particular class, position, or sphere, usually with the implication of banishment; as, "[Man] is attenuated into an aspect, and relegated to his place in a classification" (J. H. Newman); "What is it that relegates divine Cowley to that remote, uncivil Pontus of the 'British Poets,' and keeps garrulous Pepys within the cheery circle of the evening lamp?" (Lowell). See TRUST.

1. Quality or state of being commodious, also, that which is commodious; convenience; accommodation; opportunity; profit; benefit; advantage; expediency; interest; commodiousness. Obs. or Archaic, except legal.

Drawn by the commodity of a footpath. B Jonson.

Men may seek their own commodity, yet if this were done with injury to others, it was not to be suffered. Hooker.

2. That which affords convenience, advantage, or profit, esp. in commerce, including everything movable that is bought and sold (except animals), — goods, wares, merchandise, produce of land and manufactures, etc.

3. A parcel or quantity of goods; — often applied specif. to real or fictitious parcels formally bought and sold to evade the usury laws. Obs.

A commodity of brown paper and old ginger. Shak.

4. An element of wealth; an economic good. The word goods is commonly used to indicate the aggregate of elements of which wealth is composed; the term commodity has been devised to serve as a corresponding singular. Commodity has been sometimes used to include services as well as physical things, but this usage is not general.

com'mo-dore' (kŏm'ŏ-dōr'; 201), n. [Prob. a corruption of commander, or Sp. comendador a knight of a military order who holds a commandery, also a superior of a monastery, fr. LL. commendare to command. Cf. COMMEND, COMMAND, COMMANDER.] 1. Naval. An officer ranking next above a captain and below a rear admiral; specif.: a In the British navy, a captain commanding a squadron or a division of a fleet. The title is temporary and the grade is not recognized. When a commodore has on his flagship a captain under him, he receives the pay and allowances of a rear admiral. b In the United States navy, an officer commanding a squadron, division, ship of the first class, naval station, etc., having a rank corresponding to that of brigadier general in the army. Prior to 1862 the rank did not exist in the United States navy, but the title was given by courtesy to a captain who commanded or had commanded a squadron as senior captain or flag officer. The grade and title were abolished in 1899 except as a rank to which captains with Civil War service are retired. c By extension, a commander of a similar rank in another navy. Obs. or Colloq. d The flagship of a commodore or other officer commanding a squadron. Obs. or R.

2. Shared equally or similarly by two or more individuals or species or by all the members of a group or kind.

The common enemy of man. Shak.

Specif.: a Resulting from, involving, or expressing concordance; joint or mutual, as, a treaty becomes valid upon its common ratification by the powers concerned; the barons made common cause against the king. b Subject to general or indiscriminate use; accessible to, devoted to, or bestowed upon, all or many; as, a common kitchen; common favors; hence, a common woman, a prostitute. c Designating, or pertaining to, a joint source or terminus; as, common parentage; a common outlet; esp., Anat., formed of or dividing into two or more branches; as, the common carotid artery, the common iliac vessels (see under CAROTID and ILIAC); the common bile duct, formed by the union of the ducts from the liver and gall bladder.

3. Belonging or pertaining to many or to the majority; general or prevalent; as, a matter of common knowledge; specif., Archaic, widely known or talked; as, to make news common, i. e., to make it generally known.

Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths. Shak.

4. Of frequent or ordinary occurrence or appearance; familiar by reason of frequency.

Sweets grown common lose their dear delight. Shak.

5. Hence: a Of the usual type or standard; belonging or pertaining to the generality of its kind; without distinction; as, the common talents; a common soldier; the common people; — often with implication of propriety or of being up to the ordinary standard; as, common honesty or decency.

The honest, heartfelt enjoyment of common life. Irving.

b Below the ordinary standards; second-rate, inferior, mean, unrefined, etc.

He nothing common did, or mean. Marvell.

6. Designating, or pertaining to, the more prevalent or familiar type of anything; as, common salt; — often applied to various vernacular names of animals and plants to indicate a species widely known either through cultivation, extensive geographic distribution and abundance, or economic value; as, common morning-glory, common tern, etc.

7. Habitual, professed, or confessed; — used indefinitely in various terms implying illegal or criminal conduct; as, a common scold, common thief, common nuisance, etc.

8. Gram. a In Latin, Greek, etc., applied to nouns that may be either masculine or feminine; also, to verbs that have meanings both active and passive. b Of variable (short or long) quantity; as, in Gr. Pros. a syllable is common that has a short vowel followed by a mute and liquid, as in ΤΕΚΝΟΝ. c See COMMON NOUN, below.

9. Impure; unclean; — in a ceremonial or religious sense. Obs. or R.

What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common. Acts x 15.

10. Easy of approach; not reserved. Obs.

11. Iron Manuf. See BEST, a., 2.

Syn. — General, public, popular, universal; frequent, customary, habitual, usual, familiar; mediocre, mean, cheap, trite, stale, threadbare, commonplace; plebeian, inelegant, cant. — COMMON, ORDINARY, VULGAR. COMMON, as here compared (see GENERAL, MUTUAL), implies the lack of distinguishing, conspicuous, or exceptional qualities; positively, it suggests the usual, everyday, or familiar; as, the common people, a common soldier, "the light of common day" (Wordsworth). It frequently connotes the inferior, plebeian, or cheap; as, the common herd, of common clay, he is hopelessly common. ORDINARY expresses more definitely accordance with the regular order or run of things; as, "the ordinary intercourse of man with man" (J. H. Newman). It commonly implies qualities not above, frequently below, the average; as, "Choice word and measured phrase, above the reach of ordinary men" (Wordsworth); "Let others expatiate on trivial objects, ordinary characters, and uninteresting events" (Landor). As a term of depreciation, ordinary is less contemptuous than common; as, a very ordinary lookmg (cf. common-looking) person. VULGAR (see etym.) applies primarily to that which is of the people; as, the vulgar tongue, "An habitation giddy and unsure hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart" (Shak.). As here compared (see COARSE), it connotes lack of refinement, propriety, or taste; as, "I cannot help hoping I shall some time see you happier, according to the common, however vulgar, ideas of the rest of the world" (Mad. D'Arblay); "His elegance is really wonderful — there is no such thing as a vulgar line in his book" (Byron); "We have no word in English that will exactly define this want of propriety in diction. Vulgar is too strong, and commonplace too weak. Perhaps bourgeois comes as near as any" (Lowell). See REGULAR, USUAL.

A thing is not vulgar merely because it is common. 'T is common to breathe, to see, to feel, to live. Nothing is vulgar that is natural, spontaneous, unavoidable . . All slang phrases are . . vulgar, but there is nothing vulgar in the common English idiom. Hazlitt.

common assumpsit. See ASSUMPSIT, 1 b. — c. assurance. See ASSURANCE, 3. — c. average. See AVERAGE, n., 4. — c. bail. Law. = BAIL BELOW. — C. Bank. See COURT OF COMMON PLEAS. — c. bar, Common Law Pleading, a bar to an action of trespass constituted by the defendant's pleading that the act complained of was on his own freehold. — c barrator, Law, one who practices barratry. — c. beam, the king's beam. — C. Bench. See COURT OF COMMON PLEAS. — c. bile duct, Anat., the duct formed by the union of the hepatic and cystic ducts. It is about three inches long in man, and opens (together with the pancreatic duct) into the duodenum three or four inches below the pylorus. — c. brawler, Law, a habitual brawler to the disturbance of the public peace. — c. bud, Bot., a bud giving rise to both leaves and inflorescence. — c. bundle, Bot., a vascular bundle which passes from the stem into a leaf. Cf. CAULINE BUNDLE. — c. carrier, Law, one who undertakes the office of carrying goods or persons for hire and for all persons indifferently. At the common law such a carrier is bound to carry in all cases within the nature of his business when he has accommodation, and when his fixed price is tendered, and he is liable for all losses and injuries to the goods except those which happen in consequence of the act of God, or of the enemies of the country, or of the owner of the property himself. — c. chord. Music. = TRIAD (which see). — c. council, in a city or other municipal corporation, the representative (legislative) body, or its lower branch, the members of which are called common councilmen. — c. counts, Common Law Pleading, various technical counts, or allegations for stating causes of action, which are of a general nature and are used in declarations to prevent a failure of justice by reason of an inadvertent variance, esp. in actions of assumpsit, in which the common counts are those (such as for "goods sold and delivered;" for "work, labor, and services," etc.) included under the term indebitatus assumpsit and quantum meruit and quantum valebat. — c. crier, town, or public, crier. — c. divisor, Math., a number, quantity, or expression that divides two or more numbers, quantities, or expressions without remainder; an assemblage of elements common to two or more assemblages. — c. employment, Law, an employment in common with another; the employment that exists when a person is employed with other fellow servants; — used chiefly with reference to the so-called doctrine of common employment, a common-law rule that the master is not liable to his servant for the acts of a fellow servant. This rule is now generally more or less modified by statute. — c. era, the vulgar, or Christian, era. — c. field, a common. — c. fishery. Law. See FISHERY. — c. form. Schol. a A form pertaining to a species. b Probate Law. See PROBATE. — c. forms, Pleading, the forms of pleading used in the common-law actions (esp. assumpsit, covenant, debt, detinue, replevin, trespass on the case, and trover), in which the allegations were fixed in their general nature. These forms arose out of the practice of applying old writs to new facts by fiction of law. They have been abolished in England by the Judicature Acts, and in many of the United States by codes of civil procedure. — c., or vulgar, fraction, a fraction in which both numerator and denominator are expressed, thus: ½, ⅔, ¾. — c. fuse or fuze. See BICKFORD FUSE. — c. informer. See INFORMER, n., 3. — c. intendment or intent. Law. See INTENDMENT. — c. joist, Arch., one of the floor beams to which the flooring planks are secured. They are the ordinary floor beams as distinguished from girders or framed beams. — c. jury, Law, a jury drawn in the ordinary manner for the trial of causes; — distinguished from special jury. — c. land, a common. — c. law. a The general and ordinary law of a country or community, as distinguished from its subdivisions, local, civil, equity, etc.; specif.: (1) Canon Law. The general law of the universal church, as distinguished from provincial rules, papal privileges, etc. (2) Formerly, in Scotland, the Roman law. b The unwritten law (especially of England) that receives its binding force from immemorial usage and universal reception; — often used in contradistinction from statute law. Hence, any similarly developed system of jurisprudence.

Custom exists as law in every country, though it everywhere tends to lose its importance relatively to other kinds of law. It was known at Rome as the "jus moribus constitutum." It is known in England as "the common law" or "the custom of the realm," the existence of which is now usually proved by showing that it has been affirmed by the courts, or at least has been appealed to in the writings of great judicial sages. T. E. Holland.

— common-law estoppel. See ESTOPPEL. — c.-law marriage, Law, an agreement between a man and a woman to enter into the marriage relation without ecclesiastical or civil ceremony, such agreement being provable by the writings, declarations, or conduct of the parties. It is not recognized in many jurisdictions. See COHABIT, v. i., 2; MARRIAGE. — C. Law Procedure Act, Eng, an act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, 1852) simplifying legal procedure, and permitting solemn affirmation to be used instead of an oath. — c. lawyer, one versed in common law. — c. ligaments (of the vertebræ), Anat., two strong fibrous bands, an anterior and a posterior (the latter within the spinal canal), which extend from the axis to the sacrum and are attached to and bind together the bodies of the vertebræ. — c. lunar year, the period of 12 lunar months or 354 days. — c. measure. a Music. = COMMON TIME. b Math. = COMMON DIVISOR. — c. meter or metre, Hymnol., an iambic stanza of four verses or lines, having alternately four and three feet to the line, — usually indicated by the initials C. M. — c. multiple, Math., a multiple of each of two or more numbers, quantities, or expressions. A common multiple (of two or more numbers or expressions) is exactly divisible by each of them; thus, 24 is a common multiple of 3 and 4; $ax-b^4$ is a common multiple of $a+b$ and $a-b$. The lowest (or in arithmetic least) common multiple is the one lowest in value or degree. — c. name. See NAME. — c. noun, Gram., a noun or name noting any one of a class; an appellative; as, man, whip, day; also, a noun (called a collective noun) denoting a class or aggregate, as, mankind, crowd; or one (called a material noun) denoting a material; as, sand, water; — opposed to proper noun (which see). — c. nuisance, Law, a public nuisance. — c. particular meter or metre, Hymnol., iambic meter of six lines to the stanza, the number of feet in the lines being as follows: 4, 4, 3, 4, 4, 3. — c. pasturage. Scots Law. = COMMON OF PASTURE. — c. pine. = CAMPHORWOOD b. Australia. — c. pleas. Law. a Originally, in English law, those pleas, or actions, over which the crown did not claim exclusive jurisdiction; later, specif., civil actions between subjects; — distinguished from pleas of the crown. b Short for Court of Common Pleas. See under COURT. — c. prayer, the liturgy, contained in the Book of Common Prayer, which all the clergy of the Church of England are enjoined to use. With some modifications it is used in the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, and it is the basis of similar devotional works used by various sects. — c. prayer book, the Book of Common Prayer. — c. pyrites, isometric iron disulphide; pyrite. — c. rafter, Arch., in a roof, one of the rafters to which the roofing is secured, as distinguished from a hip rafter or valley rafter, or a rafter used in framing around an opening. — c. recovery, Law, a species of common assurance or mode of conveying lands through the medium of an action and judgment at law, formerly in frequent use. The procedure was a collusive suit instituted by the transferee (the demandant) in which judgment by default was rendered against a person vouched in by the tenant as a (fictitious) warrantor of the title. Common recovery was abolished in England by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74 (1833); it has long been obsolete or abolished in the United States. In the later form a preliminary deed was made to a person who was made the defendant, by whom the tenant was vouched, who in turn vouched a third party against whom judgment was rendered. This later form was called a double recovery, the earlier and less effectual a single recovery. — c. room, a room common to all, as the public room of an inn; specif.: Acad. Eng. a A room to which the members of the staff have common access, as the college parlor of the fellows at Oxford b The body of its members. — c. salt. = SALT, n., 1. — c. school, in the United States, a public elementary school. — c. scold, a woman who disturbs the public peace by frequent scolding, which is a common nuisance at the common law, and was formerly punished by the cucking stool. Prosecution for the offense has fallen into disuse. — c. seal, a seal adopted and used by a corporation. — c. sensation. Psychol. a = COENESTHESIS. b Sensations, such as pressure, which are common to more than one sense organ. — c. sense. a A sense supposed to unite the sensations of all the senses in a general sensation or perception. Obs. or Hist. b Good, sound, ordinary sense; "horse" sense; normal intelligence. c Philos. (1) With the Scottish philosophers, the intuitions which are common to all mankind. (2) The unreflective opinions of ordinary men; the ideas and conceptions natural to a man untrained in dialectic; — used especially in epistemological discussions. — c. sensory, the seat of the common sense. See COMMON SENSE a. Obs. — c. shell, Ordnance, a shell having a comparatively large cavity filled with a bursting charge of high explosive, intended to explode after passing through the lighter protective armor of a vessel. It is usually made of forged steel and is sometimes called semi-armor-piercing. It is seldom used with the cannon of larger caliber. — c. stock, ordinary capital stock not sharing the privileges of preferred stock. — c. syllogism, Logic. a syllogism having for its middle term a general term. — c. time, Music, that variety of time in which the measure consists of two or of four equal portions, esp. that having four crotchets to the bar, and designated 4/4. — c. traverse. See TRAVERSE, n. — c. year, a year of 365 days, as distinguished from leap year. — the c. run. = THE RUN.

com'mon (kŏm'ŭn), n. 1. The people; the community; also, the common people or commonalty. Obs. "The weal o' the common." Shak.

2. Land held in common, as by all members of a community; a tract of ground for pleasure, for pasturage, etc., the use of which belongs to the public or a number of persons.

3. Law. The right of taking a profit in the land of another, in common either with the owner or with other persons; — so called from the community of interest which arises between the claimant of the right and the owner of the soil, or between the claimants and other commoners entitled to the same right.

4. Eccl. A service, office, collect, hymn, or the like, suitable for any festival of a particular class; as, the common of the dedication of a church; — opposed to proper.

common appendant, the right belonging, by the common law alone, to the freeholder of ancient arable land to depasture commonable beasts upon the waste lands of the manor in which his land lies, and originally on all common pasture in the manor. The right passes with any conveyance of the land to which it belongs, without express mention, but cannot now be created where it does not already exist.

Also, formerly, a collection of such passages.
Whatever, in my reading, occurs concerning this . . . I do never fail to set it down by way of commonplace. Swift
4. That which is commonplace.
We all of us like to go on our own way, and not to be forced out of the atmosphere of commonplace. M. Arnold.
Syn.—COMMONPLACE, PLATITUDE, TRUISM.—A COMMONPLACE is a stock idea or expression; as, "The machinery as well as the characters of those novels became the commonplaces of later romancers" (Raleigh). It frequently suggests little more than the obvious, conventional, and easy thing to think or say on a given subject. PLATITUDE (see etym.) adds to commonplace the suggestion of a flat or trite remark made with an air of importance or novelty. A TRUISM is a self-evident truth; it differs from an axiom (see AXIOM) in frequently implying a somewhat superfluous insistence upon the obvious. See TRITE.
It's deadly commonplace, but after all, the commonplaces are the great poetic truths. Stevenson.
What is that sentimental platitude of somebody's . . . about the sun being to flowers what art is to life? M. Hewlett.
Truisms — "undisputed things said in a solemn way." Atlantic Monthly.

com'mune (kŏm'ūn), n. [F., fr. commun. See COMMON.] 1. The commonalty; the common people; the commons; hence, Hist., any of various bodies treated as a unit (cf. CORPORATION, UNIVERSITY) at law, as the peasantry sharing the common rights and property in a village community, the members of a municipal corporation, etc.
These men, who must be treated as the normal shareholders in the village, form a community, a commune, something that might not unfairly be called a corporation Pollock & Mait.
The commune is society's primary organic cell. A collection of communes united under the rule of a sovereign power forms the state. Dict. of Pol. Econ.
2. The smallest administrative district in France locally self-governed by a mayor and municipal council, also, the inhabitants, or the government, of such a district (see ARRONDISSEMENT); also, a similar district in various other countries. 3. In ethnology, etc., the typical society of a primitive class, tribe, or the like; a social organization in which the life of the individual is almost blended in that of the community, or in which the relationship of the individuals has something of the intimacy of family life. In such societies, natural resources, as land or hunting privileges, are held in common or subject to a periodic apportionment.
the Commune of Paris, or the Commune. a The government established in Paris (1792-94) by a usurpation of supreme power on the part of representatives chosen by the communes; its period is known as the "Reign of Terror." b The insurrectionary government, modeled on communalistic principles, which, after the retirement of the German troops, took possession of Paris from March 18 to May 27, 1871. It was suppressed after a stubborn resistance accompanied by many outrages against life and property.

com-mune' (kŏ-mūn'; kŏm'ūn; the second pron. is frequent in verse), v. i.; COM-MUNED' (-mūnd'); COM-MUN'-ING. com'mu-nism (kŏm'ū-nĭz'm), n. [Cf. F. communisme See COMMON.] 1. A system of social organization in which goods are held in common, — the opposite of the system of private property.

2. A system of social organization where large powers are given to small political units, or communes ; communalism.

3. Any theory or system of social organization involving common ownership of the agents of production, and some approach to equality in the distribution of the products of industry ; unformulated socialism.

☞ The popular use of the word communism conforms to the third of these definitions. The scientific usage sometimes conforms to the first alone, and sometimes alternates between the first and second. The former was the traditional English practice. The latter is followed by writers influenced by the work of French writers, who as a rule use the term indiscriminately in the two meanings.

4. Biol. Commensalism.

com'mu-nist (-nĭst), n. [Cf. F. communiste.] 1. One who believes in communism in any of the first three senses named, or attempts to put its principles into practice.

2. [cap.] A supporter of the Paris Commune, Communard.

Syn. — See SOCIALIST.

com'mu-nis'tic (-nĭs'tĭk), a. 1. Of or pertaining to communism or communists ; as, communistic theories.

2. Of or pertaining to or supporting the Commune of Paris ; communalistic.

3. Zoöl. Living or having their nests in common, as certain birds ; commensal.

com-mu'ni-ta'ri-an (kŏ-mū'nĭ-tā'rĭ-ăn), n. A member of a communistic body or other similar community.

com-mu'ni-ty (kŏ-mū'nĭ-tĭ), n. ; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [L. communitas : cf. OF. communité, communeté. Cf. COMMONTY ; see COMMON.] 1. A body of people having common organization or interests, or living in the same place under the same laws and regulations ; as, a community of monks. Hence, an assemblage of animals or plants living in a common home, under similar conditions of environment, or with some apparent association of interests.

Creatures that in communities exist. Wordsworth.

2. Society at large ; a commonwealth or state ; a body politic ; the public, or people in general ; — used with the definite article ; as, the interests of the community.

Burdens upon the poorer classes of the community Hallam

3. Joint relationship or ownership ; common possession or participation ; as, a community of goods.

An unreserved community of thought and feeling. Irving.

4. In various Civil law systems (as the French, Spanish, and Roman Dutch), the species of partnership or society of property arising between husband and wife. It is called conventional community when arising from contract ; legal community, as arising by virtue of the marriage itself. In French law it is called the dotal system, in Spanish law the ganancial system, and in the Roman Dutch law (still subsisting in South Africa) gemeenschap van goederen. The idea of this community sprang up in the Middle Ages in various parts of Europe, and the nature and extent of it varies in different places. Sometimes the community covers the whole property of husband and wife, whether acquired before or after the marriage ; sometimes only the "conquests" of husband and wife, that is, the property acquired during the marriage, sometimes the community property comprises the movables acquired before the marriage as well as the movable and immovable conquests. English law at an early time rejected the idea of community, and so did the law of Normandy, differing in this respect from almost every custom of northern France. The respective rights of husband or wife upon decease of the other vary considerably in the different systems. In general, however, the survivor takes half after the joint debts are paid, and has certain homestead rights; the rest goes to the heirs.

5. Common character ; likeness.

The essential community of nature between organic growth and inorganic growth. H. Spencer.

6. Social intercourse ; society.

There can be no community between you and me ; we are enemies. Mrs. Shelley.

7. Commonness ; frequency. Obs.

com'mu-nize (kŏm'ū-nīz), v. t. ; -NIZED (-nīzd) ; -NIZ'ING (-nīz'ĭng). To subject to rights of communism or common property rights ; to make common. — com'mu-ni-za'tion (-nĭ-zā'shŭn ; -nī-zā'shŭn), n.

com-mut'a-ble (kŏ-mūt'a-b'l), a. [L. commutabilis.] Capable of being commuted or interchanged.

com'mu-ta'tion (-tā'shŭn), n. [L. commutatio cf. F. commutation.] 1. A passing from one state to another, change, alteration ; mutation. Rare.

2. The act of giving one thing for another ; barter ; exchange. Obs.

The use of money is . . . that of saving the commutation of more bulky commodities. Arbuthnot.

3. A substitution, as of a less thing for a greater ; as, commutation of tithes ; commutation of fares, commutation of copyright ; commutation of rations ; specif. : a The substitution of one form of payment for another, or one payment for many, or a specific sum of money for conditional payments or allowances. b Law. The change of a penalty or punishment to a lesser one by the pardoning power, as of a sentence of death to banishment or imprisonment.

4. That which is given or paid in substitution ; as, money given as a commutation for penance.

5. Elec. Act of commutating, or commuting.

commutation of tithes, the substitution of a regular payment, chargeable to the land, for the annual tithes in kind.

commutation columns. Two columns, headed respectively D and N (Denominator and Numerator, hence called D and N columns), of numbers placed opposite a column of ages x, so calculated that the value of an immediate annuity on any life x is the quotient $N_x \div D_x$, — so named by DeMorgan (1840) because the numbers show, independently of present age, in what ratio a benefit due at one age must be altered to become an equal benefit due at another age.

commutation ticket. A ticket for transportation at a reduced rate in consideration of some special circumstance, as increase of travel ; specif., a ticket for a certain number of, or for daily, trips between neighboring places at a reduced rate, such as are commonly used by those doing business in a city and living in a suburb. Commutation tickets are excepted from the prohibition against special rates contained in the Interstate Commerce Act of Feb. 4, 1887 (24 Stat. 379), and in 145 U. S. 263 it was held that party tickets were also excepted as being "obviously within the commuting principle."

com-mut'a-tive (kŏ-mūt'a-tĭv ; kŏm'ū-tā-tĭv), a. [Cf. F. commutatif.] Of or pertaining to, or effecting, commutation. "Commutative justice treats of things in commercio." Manfred Nathan. — com-mut'a-tive-ly, adv.

commutative contract, Civil Law, a contract in which each party gives and receives an equivalent. As usually classified commutative contracts are of four kinds, as follows : Do ut des, "I give that you may give ;" Facio ut facias, "I do that you may do ;" Facio ut des, "I do that you may give ;" Do ut facias, "I give that you may do." — c. groups, Math., those from which if two substitutions be taken, one from each, the product of these two will be independent of their order, or $st = ts$. — c. law or principle, Math., the fact, in ordinary algebra, that the order of the terms of a polynomial and the order of the factors of a product are indifferent. — commutative multiplication, Math, multiplication in which the order of the factors in no way affects the product.

com'mu-ta'tor (kŏm'ū-tā'tĕr), n. Elec. a A device for reversing the direction of an electric current, as through the primary circuit of an induction coil. b An attachment for the armature of a dynamo for commutating or rectifying the induced currents in the armature conductors, or in a motor for conveying the current to the conductors. It consists usually of a ring of copper segments insulated from one another by nonconducting strips, the segments being connected electrically with the conductors according to any of several schemes. See 1st BRUSH, n., 3.

commutator bar or segment. Elec. A conducting section of a dynamo or motor commutator.

com-mute' (kŏ-mūt'), v. t. ; COM-MUT'ED (-mūt'ĕd) ; COM-MUT'ING (-mūt'ĭng). [L. commutare, -mutatum ; com- + mutare to change. See MUTATION.] 1. To exchange, interchange, or substitute.

2. To substitute for (one exaction, obligation, or due, as a payment, penalty, etc.) another that is lighter or less, as, to commute military service for a contribution.

The utmost that could be obtained was that her sentence should be commuted from burning to beheading. Macaulay.

3. Elec. To commutate.

com-mute', v. i. 1. To give compensation or substitution ; also, to serve as a substitute.

He . . . thinks it unlawful to commute, and that he is bound to pay his vow in kind. Jer. Taylor.

Syn. — Fellow, mate, compeer. — COMPANION, ASSOCIATE, FRIEND, COMRADE. COMPANION is the most general term for one who is in another's company, whether habitually or for the moment; as, "I associate nothing with my traveling companion but present objects and passing events. . . . But a friend reminds me of other things" (Hazlitt). ASSOCIATE implies habitual fellowship, usually on terms of equality; as, the captain and his profligate associates. FRIEND connotes a closer and more intimate relationship; as, "A friend loveth at all times" (Prov. XVII. 17); "A friend should bear his friend's infirmities" (Shak.). COMRADE (see etym.) suggests association in a common calling or pursuit (as, comrades in arms), or friendship based on community of interests or of fortunes; as, "We chummed together . . . living a little life of comradeship secluded from the daily rounds of lessons and school business" (J. A. Symonds). See PARTNER, ACCOMPANY.

5. Guests or visitors, in distinction from the members of a family; as, to invite company to dine.

6. An association of persons for a joint purpose or performance, esp. for carrying on a commercial or industrial enterprise or business. The term company in its general sense includes corporation, guild, joint-stock company, and partnership, but is mostly used of the larger partnerships (specifically called joint-stock companies) and trade, industrial, or commercial corporations. In British usage the term is the ordinary one for designating the historic chartered companies (as of the merchant adventurers), the trade guilds (those of London being often called city companies), and the modern industrial and commercial organizations more often called corporations in the United States, the term corporation in British usage being chiefly used of corporations other than those for trade, industrial, or commercial purposes. The ordinary small business or partnership companies are more frequently designated, esp. in England, by the name firm or partnership. See PRIVATE COMPANY.

7. Those members of a partnership firm whose names do not appear in the firm name. Colloq.

8. The body of actors employed in a theater or in the production of a play.

9. Mil. a A body or troop of soldiers. b Specif.: A subdivision of a regiment of infantry under the command of a captain, corresponding to a troop of cavalry and a battery of artillery. 10. Naut. a A merchant fleet. Obs. b The crew of a ship, including the officers; as, a ship's company.

11. [cap.] One of the Chinese Six Companies (which see).

12. Sexual intercourse. Obs. Chaucer.

Syn. — Gathering, concourse, assembly, assemblage, body, group, circle, party, coterie, set; throng, crowd, flock, multitude, host; mob, horde. — COMPANY, BAND, TROOP, CREW, GANG. COMPANY (see COMPANION) is the general term for either a temporary assemblage or a permanent association of individuals, as, "The next day . . . much people met him. And, behold, a man of the company cried out" (Luke IX. 37–38); "When all at once I saw a crowd, a host, of golden daffodils . . . A poet could not but be gay in such a jocund company" (Wordsworth); "the glorious company of the apostles" (Bk. of Com. Prayer); a military company, a company of players, a joint-stock company. A BAND (specif. a company of musicians; as, a brass band) is a company united by a common tie or purpose; as, "That small, transfigured band . . . whose one bond is, that all have been unspotted by the world" (M. Arnold). TROOP (specif. a band of soldiers, or, pl., soldiers collectively; as, "Farewell the plumed troop, and the big wars," Shak.; the British troops) frequently suggests the idea of a throng or multitude (cf. shoal, swarm, under FLOCK); as, "troops of friends" (Shak.); "There entertain him all the saints above, in solemn troops, and sweet societies" (Milton); cf. "Ghosts . . . troop home to churchyards" (Shak.). CREW (specif. a ship's company), as here compared, has always a derogatory connotation; as, "a crew of mischievous critics at Edinburgh" (Hazlitt); "They 'll be within their rights to lump us all together as a false, cruel, conspiring crew" (H. James). GANG (when not used specif. for a group or squad of workmen; as, a gang of lumbermen, of section hands, of roustabouts) has a strongly opprobrious or contemptuous connotation; as, "Depend upon it that there were worse folks going, of that gang, than even Sheridan was" (Byron); a gang of robbers, a gang of thieving politicians; I detest the whole gang (cf. bunch, pack, under BUNDLE). See COTERIE, COMBINATION, MULTITUDE, ASSEMBLY.

3. Gram. To inflect according to the degrees of comparison; to state the positive, comparative, and superlative forms of. Most adjectives of one syllable are compared by affixing "-er" and "-est" to the positive form; as, black, blacker, blackest, those of more than one syllable are usually compared by using "more" and "most" before the positive; as, beautiful, more beautiful, most beautiful. The choice between the two is largely a matter of euphony. Inverted comparison is often made by the use of "less" and "least."

Syn. — COMPARE, CONTRAST, COLLATE. Things are COMPARED when they are set side by side, in order to show their relative value or excellence, or to bring out their characteristic qualities; they are CONTRASTED when they are set over against one another in order to emphasize their differences; as, one may compare the movement of the Odyssey with that of the Æneid, to arrive at their distinctive qualities; one may thereupon contrast the buoyancy and rapidity of the one with the stateliness and dignity of the other. One object is compared with another as above; to another, when it is formally represented, on the basis of a real or (frequently) imagined similarity, as like it; as, Pope compares Homer with (not to) Vergil; he compares Homer to (not with) the Nile, pouring out his riches with a boundless overflow, Vergil to (not with) a river in its banks, with a gentle and constant stream; "With mine compare thou thine own state" (Shak.); "Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?" (id.). To COLLATE is to compare minutely or critically, in order to note points of agreement and divergence; it applies esp. to the minute comparison of books and manuscripts for the sake of ascertaining or establishing the correct text; as, to collate the printed text of Vergil with the manuscripts. See COMPARISON.

As sharp legal practitioners, no class of human beings can bear comparison with them. Macaulay

c Gram. The modification, by inflection or otherwise, of an adjective or adverb to denote degrees of quality, quantity, or relation. Thus, little, less, least; soon, sooner, soonest, illustrate the three degrees of comparison: the positive, comparative, and superlative. See COMPARE, v. t., 3.

2. State of being compared; a relative estimate, also, a state, quality, or relation, admitting of being compared; as, there is no comparison between them.

The miracles of our Lord and those of the Old Testament afford many interesting points of comparison Trench.

3. Rhet. A figure by which one person or thing is compared to another, or the two are considered with regard to some property or quality, which is common to them both; e. g., the lake sparkled like a jewel.

Whereto shall we liken the kingdom of God? Or with what comparison shall we compare it? Mark IV. 30.

4. Phren. The faculty of making comparisons.

Syn. — COMPARISON, SIMILE, METAPHOR. COMPARISON (see COMPARE) is the general term, and applies whenever one object is compared with another; it usually implies, as distinguished from simile, that the objects compared belong to the same class, or are more alike than different; as, "The staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam" (1 Sam. XVII. 7); "a color like the color of the smoke from damp fuel" (Dickens); "a hard white stucco, which glistened like enamel" (Prescott). A SIMILE is an imaginative comparison between objects which are essentially unlike, except in certain aspects; as, "I have compared one with the other, though very unlike, like all similes" (Byron); "Thy teeth are like a flock of sheep" (Cant. IV. 2); "As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country" (Prov. XXV. 25); "ponderous syllables, like sullen waves in the half-glutted hollows of reef rocks" (Keats); "The feeling of unhappiness . . . covered him as water covers a log" (Kipling). 8. (Usually in pl.) An instrument for describing circles, transferring measurements, etc., consisting, in its simple form, of two pointed branches, or legs, joined at the top by a pivot; — called also pair of compasses. Compasses have generally one pen or pencil point; those with two sharp metal points for measuring are specifically named dividers (which see). They are variously designated according to form or use, as: beam compass, which consists of a rod or beam having sliding sockets that carry steel or pencil points, and is used for drawing large circles; bisecting compass (see PROPORTIONAL COMPASS, below); bow compass (see in Vocab.): bullet compass, having a ball or the like on one leg, to set in a hole; caliber compasses or caliper compasses, a pair of calipers; club compass, or cone compass (= BULLET COMPASS, above); double compass (= PROPORTIONAL COMPASS, below); elliptic compass, used for drawing ellipses; hair compass, capable of extremely delicate adjustment, usually by means of a jointed leg the end of which is controlled by a spring and fine adjusting screw; millwright's compass, a dividing and scribing tool used in laying off the dress on the face of millstones; Napier's compass, having folding legs, one bearing a pen and a point on a pivot, the other a pencil and a point; oval compass (= ELLIPTIC COMPASS, above); pillar compass, similar to a universal compass, but with legs of fixed length; proportional compass, having legs with points at both ends and an adjustable joint (When open the distances between the points at the two ends are proportional to the lengths of the corresponding legs. It is used in copying drawings on an enlarged or a reduced scale. A similar instrument having a fixed joint one third way along the legs is called a bisecting compass); quadrant compass, a carpenter's compass with a quadrantal arc and binding screw; rack compass, a joiner's compass with rack adjustment; scribing compass, which has one sharp-pointed and one scooping leg, used in leather working; triangular compass, having three legs of which one is attached by a double joint (It is used for transferring three points, as the vertices of a triangle, from one drawing to another); tube compass, which is similar to Napier's compass, but has tubular extensible legs; universal compass, a large compass with hollow adjustable legs, each containing a complete bow compass which may be used as part of the large compass, or independently; volute compass, having legs that can be gradually expanded, so that a spiral can be drawn; whole-and-half compass (= BISECTING COMPASS, above), wing compass, a joiner's compass having an arc and set screw.

1 Compass with Pen Point, a Extension Piece, b Pencil Point; 2 Proportional Compass; 3 Beam Compass.

9. pl. [cap.] Astron. = CIRCINUS. 10. An instrument for determining directions upon the earth's surface by means of a magnetized bar or needle turning freely upon a pivot and pointing to the magnetic north and south. See MAGNETIC NEEDLE, MARINER'S COMPASS, SURVEYOR'S COMPASS.

Syn. — See RANGE.

com'pass (kŭm'pas), a. Circular; curved or forming a curve; as, a compass or bent timber; specif., semicircular; as, a compass window. (See Vocab. for compass card, compass joint, etc., in which compass, n., is the first element.)

compass bar, Metal., a fixed ring for supporting the test or cupel hearth in position in the reverberatory furnace for extracting silver from lead. — c. brick, a curved brick for steening shafts and wells. Cf. ARCH BRICK, 1. — c. calipers, a pair of callipers. Obs. (See also in Vocab.) — c. plane, Carp., a plane with a convex sole for producing or smoothing curved surfaces. — c. rafter, a rafter cut to a curve; — used in an ornamented roof truss, or in a gable framing. — c. roof, a timber roof in which each truss has its rafters, collar beams, and braces combined into an arched form. — c. saw, a narrow-bladed saw for cutting curves. — c. window, Arch., a bay or oriel window of semicircular plan.

A short system or compendium of a science. I. Watts.

2. An abbreviation or contraction. Rare.

3. A short cut; also, saving; economy. Obs.

Syn. — COMPENDIUM, ABRIDGMENT, EPITOME, ABSTRACT, SYNOPSIS, SYLLABUS, BRIEF, DIGEST agree in denoting large content in comparatively small compass. COMPENDIUM implies in general the inclusion within small compass of a large subject or system, with or without suggestion of a more extensive treatment from which it is condensed; ABRIDGMENT always implies the reduction to smaller compass of a larger work, with the retention of relative completeness; EPITOME denotes a concise summary, by main heads, of a subject or treatise, often in such fashion that the summary acquires a value of its own; an ABSTRACT is also a summary of essential points, but is seldom thought of as attaining independent worth, a SYNOPSIS is such an ordered exhibition of the salient points of a subject or treatise as may be apprehended at a glance. SYLLABUS has specific application to synopses of lectures or to the brief abstracts prefixed to cases in law reports; BRIEF, to the concise statement of a case or an argument; DIGEST, to a compendium of a body of law. See ABRIDGE.

com-pen'e-trate (kŏm-pĕn'ē-trāt), v. t. [com- + penetrate.] To penetrate throughout, to pervade. — com-pen'e-tra'tion (-trā'shŭn), n.

See COMPETE.] 1. Act of seeking, or endeavoring to gain, what another is endeavoring to gain at the same time; common strife for the same object; strife for superiority; emulous contest; rivalry, as for approbation, or for a prize; as, competition with a person for an object sought.

Competition to the crown there is none, nor can be. Bacon.

There is no competition but for the second place. Dryden.

2. Com. & Economics. The effort of two or more parties, acting independently, to secure the custom of a third party by the offer of the most favorable terms; also, the relations between different buyers or different sellers which result from this effort.

Where competition does not act at all there is complete monopoly A. T. Hadley.

3. A contest between rivals; a match or trial between contestants

Syn. — COMPETITION, EMULATION, RIVALRY. COMPETITION implies a struggle or contest between two or more persons for the same object; EMULATION (see EMULATE), an ardent ambition or desire to equal or excel. Neither term connotes, as a rule, depreciation; emulation (which no longer implies envy or grudging) is commonly regarded as honorable or praiseworthy; as, "Competition is the life of trade," a keen competition for a prize; "A society where emulation without envy, ambition without jealousy, contention without animosity, incited industry and awakened genius" (Gibbon); "A cook might as well resolve to make bread without fermentation, as a pedagogue to carry on a school without emulation" (Sydney Smith). RIVALRY more frequently suggests a personal contest for selfish ends, resulting in envy and jealousy; as, the rivalry of two candidates for the same honor, of two suitors for a woman's hand, of two neighboring cities; cf., "to be no man's rival in love, or competitor in business" (Spectator). See AMBITION, CONTEST.

com-plaint' (kŏm-plānt'), n. [F. complainte. See COMPLAIN.] 1. Expression of grief, regret, pain, censure, grievance, or resentment; lamentation; murmuring.
I poured out my complaint before him. Ps. cxlii. 2.
Grievous complaints of you. Shak.
2. A plaint or plaintive poem.
Songs, complaintes, roundels, virelayes. Chaucer.
3. Law. A formal allegation or charge (generally under oath) against a party, made or presented to the appropriate court or officer, as for a wrong done or a crime committed; variously applied, as to: the initial bill in proceedings in equity; the declaration in a common-law pleading; the statement of claim under the English practice acts; the initial pleading under the code practice in various States of the United States.
4. Cause or subject of complaint or murmuring.
The poverty of the clergy in England hath been the complaint of all who wish well to the church. Swift.
5. An ailment or disease of the body.
One in a complaint of his bowels. Arbuthnot.
Syn. — Lamentation, murmuring, sorrow, grief; disease, illness, disorder, malady, ailment.
com'plai-sance' (kŏm'plā-zăns'; kŏm-plā'zăns; 277 · see note below), n. [F. complaisance. See COMPLAISANT; cf. COMPLACENCE.] Disposition to please or oblige; act or habit of obliging compliance with the wishes of others; a deportment indicative of a desire to please; courtesy; civility.
These [ladies] . . . are by the just complaisance and gallantry of our nation the most powerful part of our people. Addison.
☞ The primary accent in both complaisance and complaisant has varied between the first and the last syllable, present usage apparently favoring that on the first, but the second accentuation above is now also common for both.
Syn. — Civility, courtesy, urbanity, suavity, affability, good breeding. See COMPLACENCY.
com'plai-sant' (-zănt'; see COMPLAISANCE), a. [F. complaisant, p. pr. of complaire to acquiesce as a favor, fr. L. complacere. See COMPLACENT.] Disposed to please; courteous; obliging; compliant; as, a complaisant gentleman.
There are to whom my satire seems too bold:
Scarce to wise Peter complaisant enough. Pope.
Syn. — Affable, gracious, civil, polite, well-bred.
— com'plai-sant'ly, adv. — com'plai-sant'ness, n.
com'pla-nate (kŏm'plā-nāt; kŏm-plā'nāt), a. [L. complanatus, p. p. of complanare to make plane. See PLANE, v. t.] Flattened; made level.
com'pla-nate (-nāt), v. t. To make level; to flatten. Obs.
com'pla-na'tion (kŏm'plā-nā'shŭn), n. [See COMPLANATE, a.] 1. A leveling off or flattening out.
2. Math. The process or result of finding a plane area equivalent to a given portion of a curved surface.
com-plect' (kŏm-plĕkt'), v. t. [L. complecti. See COMPLEX, a.] 1. To embrace. Obs.
2. To plait together; to interweave.
com'ple-ment (kŏm'plē-mĕnt), n. [L complementum: cf. F. complément. See COMPLETE, v. t., and cf. COMPLIMENT.] 1. Act of completing or fulfilling; accomplishment; state or fact of being complete. Obs.
2. Her. Fullness (of the moon); as, the moon in her complement.
3. That which fills up or completes; as: a The added word or words by which a predication is made complete; as in, they made Saul king; to set the slaves free; filled them with terror; it proved of no use. b The quantity or number required to fill a thing or make it complete; full allowance. c That which is required to supply a deficiency, to make perfect, or to complete a symmetrical whole; one of two mutually completing parts.
History is the complement of poetry. Sir J. Stephen.
4. Full quantity, number, or amount; a complete set; completeness.
To exceed his complement and number appointed him, which was one hundred and twenty persons. Hakluyt.
5. Chem. See SIDE-CHAIN THEORY.
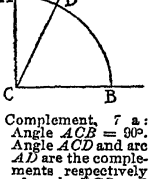
6. Naut. The whole force of a vessel; specif., Nav., the entire force of officers and crew allowed to a ship.
7. Math. a The amount of angle or arc by which a given angle or arc falls short of 90°, or, in earlier usage, of a multiple of 90°. b Of a logarithm, the numerical amount by which the logarithm falls short of 10.



Complement. 7 a: Angle $ACB = 90°$. Angle ACD and arc AD are the complements respectively of angle DCB and arc DB, and vice versa.

8. Music. The interval required with a given interval to complete the octave; as, the fourth is the complement of the fifth, the sixth of the third.
9. Something added for ornamentation; an accessory. Obs.
Vain art or curious complements. Spenser.
10. A quality or accomplishment of a "finished" gentleman. Obs.
11. A ceremonial observance; a compliment. Obs.
Syn. — COMPLEMENT, SUPPLEMENT. A COMPLEMENT is that which makes up or supplies a deficiency; it frequently implies two things which mutually complete each other and together constitute a whole; as, Norman refinement and flexibility are the complement, in the English vocabulary, of its Saxon homelmess and strength. SUPPLEMENT, as here compared (see APPENDIX), implies an addition to that which has already relative completeness; it does not imply, like complement, a mutual dependence of the parts; as, foreign travel is a profitable supplement to a collegiate education. A corresponding distinction holds between complementary and supplementary.
I . . conceived the Rev. Mr Wilbur, who should express the more cautious element of the New England character and its pedantry, as Mr. Biglow should serve for its homely common sense vivified and heated by conscience. The parson was to be the complement rather than the antithesis of his parishioner. Lowell complement of a parallelogram, Geom., a gnomon. — c. of a star's altitude, Astron., the angular distance of the star from the zenith. — c. of the dew point, Meteor., the number of degrees that must be added to the dew point to make it coincide with the temperature of the air.
com'ple-ment' (kŏm'plē-mĕnt'; kŏm'plē-mĕnt'; 277), v. t. 1. To supply a lack; to supplement.
2. v. t. & i. = COMPLIMENT. Obs.
com'ple-men'tal (kŏm'plē-mĕn'tăl), a. 1. Of the nature of, or pertaining to, a complement.
Royal assents to laws are no ways essential . . . but rather a complemental ceremony. Prynne.
2. Accomplished; — of persons. Obs.
3. Ceremonious; complimentary. Obs.
complemental air, Physiol., the quantity of air (averaging 100 cubic inches) which can be drawn into the lungs by the deepest possible inspiration in addition to that which is introduced in ordinary breathing. — c. males, Zool., peculiar small males living parasitically on the ordinary hermaphrodite individuals of certain barnacles.
— com'ple-men'tal-ly, adv. — com'ple-men'tal-ness, n com'ple-men'ta-rism (-tă-rĭz'm), n. The relation or the occurrence of complementaries.
com'ple-men'ta-ry (-rĭ), a. 1. Serving to fill out or complete; as, complementary numbers.
2. Mutually supplying each other's lack.
3. Petrog. Designating sets of small bodies of igneous rock (commonly dikes) of varying composition which accompany large masses from which they were derived by differentiation, and which have in total, when combined, the same chemical composition as these masses.
complementary afterimage. See AFTERIMAGE. — c. air. Physiol. = COMPLEMENTAL AIR. — c. angles or arcs, Math., two angles or arcs whose sum is a right angle or quadrant. — c. color or colour. See COLOR, n., 1. — c. determinant. Math. See MINOR DETERMINANT. — c. extents or surfaces, in *n-dimensional space, Math., any two extents or surfaces the sum of whose dimensions equals n; as a line and a plane in ordinary space, a line and a line in a plane, etc. — c. function, Math., the primitive of a subsidiary differential equation, whose right member is 0, which must be added to any particular integral of the same equation with the right member not 0, to obtain the primitive of this latter equation. — c. males. = COMPLEMENTAL MALES. — c. minors, Math., the two determinants formed by the constituents (taken in order) that are respectively struck out twice or not struck out at all in striking out the same number of rows and of columns in a determinant. See DETERMINANT. — c. modulus, Math., the magnitude k' such that $k^2 + k'^2 = 1$; — so called because if $k = \sin \frac{1}{2} x$ (as commonly), then $k' = \cos \frac{1}{2} x$. — c. operations, Math., two operations such that if either turns the form F into F′, the other turns F′ into F. — c. parallelogram. See GNOMON, 3. — c. set, Math., the set of all points of an interval that do not belong to a certain closed set.
2. That which is complementary, as a color or image.
com-plete' (kŏm-plēt'; formerly often accented com'plete, as in Shakespeare), a. [L. completus, p. p. of complere to fill up; com- + plere to fill. See FULL, a.; cf. COMPLY, COMPLIN.] 1. Filled up; with no part, item, or element lacking; free from deficiency, entire; perfect; consummate. "Complete perfections." Milton.
Ye are complete in him. Col. II. 10
That thou, dead corse, again in complete steel Revisit'st thus the glimpses of the moon. Shak.
2. Brought to an end or to a final or intended condition; concluded; completed; as, the edifice is complete.
This course of vanity almost complete. Prior.
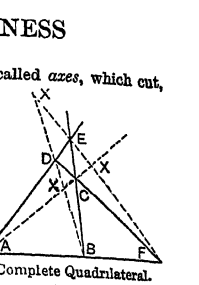
3. Perfectly equipped or skilled; accomplished, as in an art or pursuit; as, "The Compleat Angler." Walton.
4. Bot. Having all the parts or organs which belong to it or to the typical form; — said of a flower having calyx, corolla, androecium, and gynoecium.
Syn. — Entire, perfect, total. See WHOLE.
complete annuity. See ANNUITY, 2. — c. branch of a curve, Math., any branch of a curve conceived as continuous through infinity. — c. corporation. See CORPORATION. — c. dyadic, Math., one not reducible to the sum of less than three dyads. — c. equation, Math., one containing all positive integral powers of the unknown, lower than the highest. — c. fertilizer, Agric., any fertilizer which contains available phosphorus, nitrogen, and potassium, three of the elements essential to plant growth. — c. group, Math., one that admits of no contragredient isomorphism and has no self-conjugate operations besides identity. — c. integral, Math., of a partial differential equation (1) of the first order, a solution that contains as many arbitrary constants as there are independent variables; (2) of higher order, the most general relation connecting the variables that on substitution, with its derivatives, in the equation satisfies it identically. — c. linkage. See LINKAGE, n., 3. — c. pair, Kinematics, a closed pair. — c. primitive, Math., the complete integral, regarded as source of the differential equation. — c. quadrilateral, Geom., the figure determined by four lines; a tetragram. It has four sides, as AB, BC, CD, DA, and three diagonals, as AC, BD, EF, called axes, which cut, each two the other, harmonically in three centers, xxx, one it may be, or two (as in case of a square) at infinity.



Complete Quadrilateral.

com-plete' (kŏm-plēt'), v. t.; COM-PLET'ED (-plēt'ĕd); COM-PLET'ING (-plēt'ĭng). To bring to a state of entirety or perfection; to perfect; to furnish or equip fully; to fulfill; finish; as, to complete a task.
And, to complete her bliss, a fool for mate. Pope.
Syn. — Perform, execute, terminate, conclude, finish, end, fill up, achieve, realize, effect, consummate, accomplish, effectuate, fulfill, bring to pass. See CLOSE, v. t.
com-ple'tion (-plē'shŭn), n. [L. completio a filling, a fulfillment.] 1. Act or process of making complete; the getting through to the end; as, the completion of an undertaking, an education, a service.
The completion of some repairs Prescott.
2. State of being complete; fulfillment; realization.
Predictions receiving their completion in Christ. South.
com-ple'tive (-tĭv), a. [L. completivus: cf. F. complétif.] Making complete. — com-ple'tive-ly, adv.
com-ple'to-ry (kŏm-plē'tō-rĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). [L. completorium.] 1. Eccl. = COMPLIN.
2 That which affords completion.
com-ple'to-ry, a. Serving to complete.
Completory of ancient presignifications. Barrow.
com'plex (kŏm'plĕks), a. [L. complexus, p. p. of complecti to entwine around, comprise; com- + plectere to twist, akin to plicare to fold. See PLAIT, n.] 1. Composed of two or more parts; composite; not simple; as, a complex being.
Ideas thus made up of several simple ones put together, I call complex; such as beauty, gratitude, a man. Locke.
2. Involving many parts; complicated; intricate.
When the actual motions of the heavens are calculated in the best possible way, the process is difficult and complex. Whewell.
Syn. — Implicated, entangled, twisted, interlaced, mazy, perplexed. — COMPLEX, COMPLICATED, INTRICATE, INVOLVED agree in expressing an interrelation of elements or parts. An object is COMPLEX when it is made up of interrelated or interacting parts (cf. compound, under AGGREGATE); as, the complex mechanism of a watch; it is COMPLICATED when the interconnection or arrangement of the parts is difficult to trace or understand; as, a complicated problem in mathematics; it is INTRICATE when, from the interwinding or reticulation of its parts, it is perplexing or hard to follow out; as, the intricate tracery of an arabesque; it is INVOLVED when its parts are thought of as intertwined, or as returning in some fashion upon themselves; as, the involved patterns of sailors' or heraldic knots; an involved sentence or argument. The same object may often be regarded from more than one of the above points of view; as, a sailor's knot may be intricate and complicated, as well as involved; a network of railroad tracks may be complicated as well as intricate, though not involved.
Almost the whole mass of the heart is made up of . . . muscular fibers, which have a very remarkable and complex arrangement. Huxley.
[Hugo] has set before himself the task of realizing, in the language of romance, much of the involution of our complicated lives Stevenson.
He [Leonardo] wasted many days in curious tricks of design, seeming to lose himself in the spinning of intricate devices of lines and colors. W. Pater.
Involved enigmas and riddles. Sir T. Browne.
complex division, Math., division of a complex magnitude. — c. ether, Chem. See ETHER, 3. — c. fraction, a fraction having a fraction or mixed number in the numerator or denominator or in each. — c. function, Math., a function of the complex variable. — c. harmonic function. See HARMONIC FUNCTION. — c. integer, Math., a complex number, $a + ib$, where a and b are real integers. — c number, Math., specif., an expression of the form $a + ib$, where a and b are ordinary real numbers and i is the so-called imaginary unit $\sqrt{-1}$, defined by $i \cdot i = -1$; generally, any similar algebraic expression, as $ax + by + ck + \ldots$, compounded of disparate units, i, j, k, etc. — c. plane, Math., the plane of the complex variable $z = x + iy$, on which every point corresponds to a pair of values of x and y, while every such pair corresponds to a point. — c. reaction time. See REACTION TIME. — c. salt, Chem., a salt formed by the union of simpler salts and yielding ions more complex than theirs. — c. sentence, Gram., a sentence having one principal and one or more subordinate clauses (see CLAUSE); as in "The temple of God is holy, which temple ye are" (1 Cor. iii. 17); "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. v. 5); — sometimes extended to include also the compound sentence. — c. singularity, Math., a singularity due to coincident tangents meeting the curve in more than three points. — c. syllogism, Logic, a chain syllogism, or sorites. — c. unit, Math., a complex number $a + ib$, whose modulus or absolute value, $\sqrt{a^2+b^2}$, is 1. It is represented by a point on the unit circle about the origin. — c. variable, Math., a variable compounded of real and imaginary parts, as $x + iy$, commonly depicted on a plane by that point whose rectangular Cartesian coördinates are x and y, all real numbers being laid off on the X axis and all pure imaginaries or i-numbers on the Y axis; — sometimes called affix of the point.
com'plex, n. [L. complexus.] 1. Assemblage of related things; a whole made up of complicated or interrelated parts.
This parable of the wedding supper comprehends in it the whole complex of all the blessings and privileges exhibited by the gospel. South.
2. Gram. A complex sentence.
3. Math. An assemblage in space of forms of any kind that fulfill one condition; esp., a triple infinity of lines, whose coördinates therefore fulfill a single condition. All the intersections of mutual perpendicular planes tangent to a quadric form a complex of lines.
complexes in involution. Math. See ORTHOGONAL COMPLEXES.
com-plex' (kŏm-plĕks'), v. t.; COM-PLEXED' (-plĕkst'); COM-PLEX'ING. [See COMPLEX, a.] To make complex or make into a complex; to make up by mingling.

2. A ceremonious greeting; a formal respect; — usually pl.; as, to send one's compliments to a friend.
3. A complimentary gift; a gratuity. Archaic or Dial. Eng.
Syn. — Praise, commendation, eucomium; blandishment, obsequiousness, servility, sycophancy. — COMPLIMENT, FLATTERY, ADULATION. A COMPLIMENT is a courteous expression of commendation, and may be either sincere or merely formal; as, "In the noble dedication . . . to the Duchess of Ormond we have an example of Dryden's most polished and magnificent style in elaborate personal compliment" (E. W. Gosse); "We are not so fond of paying compliments" (Fielding). FLATTERY is never sincere; it plays upon self-love or vanity by means of artful or obsequious praise; as, "Intoxicating with compliment . . . that you in return may gild with flattery" (Beaconsfield); "When one is flagging, a little praise (if it can be had genuine and unadulterated by flattery, which is as difficult to come by as the genuine mountain dew) is a cordial after all" (Scott). ADULATION is servile and fulsome flattery; as, "Willoughby's comportment while the showers of adulation drenched him might be likened to the composure of Indian gods undergoing worship" (G Meredith); "No adulation was too fulsome for her, no flattery of her beauty too gross" (J. R. Green). See ENCOMIUM, FAWN.

3. Phys. Chem. Any constituent (of a system) the concentration of which in the different phases is capable of independent variation. See PHASE RULE.
4. Astron. One of the stars of a double or multiple star.
Syn. — COMPONENT, CONSTITUENT, INGREDIENT, ELEMENT. COMPONENT (n. or a.) applies to the parts which go to make up a compound; CONSTITUENT (n. or a.), so far as it differs from COMPONENT (with which it is often exactly synonymous), connotes more definitely the essential or formative character of the parts; as, copper and zinc are the components of brass, hydrogen and oxygen the constituents of water; "Sensibility . . . is not only a characteristic feature, but may be deemed a component part, of genius" (Coleridge); "Break a ray of light into its constituent colors" (J. H. Newman). INGREDIENT primarily suggests a mixture (such as a drink, a medicine) rather than a compound; as, "The ingredients of our poisoned chalice" (Shak.); "I used to see him squatting by a fire . . . stirring ingredients in a caldron" (J. A. Symonds). Similarly, in its fig. uses it suggests rather something which enters (see etym.) into a composition than an essential part; as, "A little grain of romance is no ill ingredient to preserve and exalt the dignity of human nature" (Swift); "In literature it is what we call genius, an insoluble ingredient which kindles, lights, inspires" (Lowell). ELEMENT, as here compared, adds to the idea of constituent parts or principles the suggestion of certain basic or ultimate qualities, esp. as applied to immaterial or intangible things; as, the native and foreign elements in English, the elements of beauty, there were elements of tragedy in the situation. See PART.

com'po-nen'tal (kŏm'pō-nĕn'tăl), a. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of, a component or components.

Com-pos'i-tæ (kŏm-pŏz'ĭ-tē), n. pl. [NL., fr. L. compositus made up of parts. See COMPOSITE.] Bot. An immense natural group of metachlamydeous dicotyledonous plants, embracing the most highly developed families in the vegetable kingdom, and characterized by having the small flowers or florets borne in dense involucrate heads resembling single flowers. All plants of this type, as the daisy, dandelion, aster, ragweed, and wormwood, were formerly and are still often treated as one family, under the name Compositæ; but they are now more generally divided among the families Asteraceæ, Cichoriaceæ, and Ambrosiaceæ, together forming the order Asterales. See these terms.

com-pos'ite (kŏm-pŏz'ĭt; kŏm'pŏ-zĭt; 277: the second is the prevailing pron. in England), a. [L. compositus made up of parts, p. p. of componere. See COMPOUND, v. t.; cf. COMPOST.] 1. Made up of distinct parts or elements; compounded; as, a composite language.
Happiness, like air and water . . is composite. Landor.
2 [cap.] Arch. Belonging to a modification of the Corinthian order introduced in Roman imperial times by combining the Ionic volutes with the acanthus-circled bell of the Corinthian. In the 16th century classification of "the orders" the Composite was the 5th. Called also by early commentators the Roman, or the Italic, order. See 3d CAPITAL, Illust.; ORDER.
3. Bot. Belonging to, or having the characters of, the group Compositæ; as, a composite plant; a composite inflorescence.
4. Shipbuilding. Built of steel or iron framework and wooden planking; of or pertaining to such a style of structure; as, a composite ship; the composite principle.
composite arch, Arch., an arch the sides of which are made up of curves struck from different centers;—applied to certain forms of the pointed arch. See ARCH, Illust. — c. balance, Elec., a balance capable of being used as an ammeter, a voltmeter, or a wattmeter at will by suitably altering the coil connections. — c. candle, a candle made of a mixture of substances; — applied esp. to a particular kind composed of stearic acid and stearin. — c. carriage, a railroad car having compartments of different classes. Eng. — c. determinant, Math., the sum of all possible determinants that may be formed from a rectangular array of m rows and $m+n$ columns by suppressing n columns in every possible way. — c. group, Math., one containing one or more self-conjugate subgroups other than 1. — c. number, Math., a product of two or more integers each greater than 1. — c. photograph or portrait, one made by a combination, or blending, of several distinct photographs, either by photographing the individuals one over another on the same plate, or by making one print from a number of negatives. — c. proposition, Logic, a proposition consisting of and asserting several propositions. — c. sailing, Naut. See under SAILING. — c. syllogism, Logic, a syllogism with more than two premises.

2. A composite thing; a composition, combination, or compound; specif.: a Gram. A compound word. Rare. b A composite carriage, candle, photograph, etc.
3. Specif.: Bot. A plant of the order Asterales, commonly known as Compositæ (which see). The composites form about one tenth of the living seed plants, and are distributed in all parts of the world. The vast majority are herbs; many are shrubs and some even trees. They are of little economic value, though a few, as the artichoke and lettuce, are cultivated for food. Numerous species are ornamental. Composites are considered the highest plants on account of the remarkable extent to which they display union of parts. The individual flowers have a gamopetalous corolla; anthers united into a tube; calyx and ovary coherent, the former modified into a pappus; and flowers combined in a compact head subtended by an involucre, the whole structure resembling a single flower, especially when the outer florets, as in the daisy, develop ligulate, petal-like corollas.

Section of Flower Head of a Composite (Coreopsis) enlarged, with all but three florets removed. 1 Discoid Floret; 2 Chaff; 3, 3 Radiate Florets, or Rays; 4, 4 Bracts of Involucre Syn.—COMPOSITE, COMBINATION, COMPOUND are here compared only in their adjective uses (see AGGREGATE), as elements in the names of certain appliances, apparatus, or manufactured products. COMBINATION suggests an object designed or constructed to serve more than one use or function; as, a combination bicycle, a combination car, pedal, plane. COMPOSITE suggests an object made by combining different, sometimes heterogeneous, parts; as, a composite photograph, a composite beam, ship, carriage. COMPOUND stresses the complexity of the component parts; as, a compound microscope, a compound lever, steam engine, locomotive.

Thus we are agreed:
I crave our composition may be written. Shak.
9. Law. The adjustment of a debt, or avoidance of an obligation or liability, by some form of compensation agreed on between the parties; also, the sum or amount of compensation agreed upon in the adjustment. Formerly in English law, as early in other systems, violent wrongs and many other offenses could be settled by composition (see BOTE, 3): but composition of a felony is now unlawful. An agreement of composition by a single creditor to discharge the debtor in full upon payment of a part is void at common law; but such an agreement by several or all creditors is binding.
10. Scots Law. The fine due to a superior on the actual or implied entry of a singular successor, consisting broadly of a year's rent less the fixed charges.
11. Logic. a A fallacy in which a term taken distributively is used in reasoning as if taken collectively. b The production from two or more component terms, or propositions, of a compound term, or proposition, which is true of that of which all the components are true, and false of that of which any of the components is false.
12. Music. a The combination of tones forming a compound organ stop. b A mechanism for operating the drawstops of an organ in groups.
composition of causes, Logic, the principle of the correlative and mutual action of causes in producing a single effect; — enunciated by John Stuart Mill.
The general idea of the composition of causes has been seen to be, that though two or more laws interfere with one another, and apparently frustrate or modify one another's operation, yet in reality all are fulfilled, the collective effect being the exact sum of the effects of the causes taken separately. J. S. Mill.
— c. of forces, velocities, etc., Mech., the finding of a single force, velocity, etc. (called the resultant), which shall be equal in effect to two or more given ones (called the components). See PARALLELOGRAM OF FORCES. — c. of proportion, Math., the deduction from a correct proportion of another correct proportion by putting the sum of the first and second terms for the first and the sum of the third and fourth for the third; thus, if $a:b=c:d$, then $a+b:b=c+d:d$;— sometimes called componendo. — c. of ratios. Math. See COMPOUND RATIO.

composition cloth. A kind of cloth made from long flax and covered with a preparation making it waterproof.

composition face, or composition plane. Cryst. The plane by which the two individuals of a twin crystal are united in their reversed positions.

composition series. Math. A series, $G, G_1, G_2, \ldots G_m$, consisting of a composite group G and subgroups of G, each the maximum self-conjugate subgroup of the foregoing.

com-pos'i-tive (kŏm-pŏz'ĭ-tĭv), a. [L. compositivus.] Having the quality of entering into, or being made up by, composition; involving composition; compounded; composite.
—com-pos'i-tive-ly, adv.
Sovereign states permanently united together by a federal compact either form a system of confederated states (properly so called) or a supreme federal government, which has been sometimes called a compositive state. Wheaton.

com-pos'i-tor (-tẽr), n. [L., an arranger: cf. F. compositeur.] One who composes: a One who settles a disagreement. Obs. Scot. b One who makes a literary work. Obs. & R. c One who sets in order. d Print. One who sets type.

com-pos'i-to'ri-al (-tō'rĭ-ăl), a. Of or pertaining to a composer or compositor.

com'pos men'tis (kŏm'pŏs mĕn'tĭs). [L.] Law. Sane in mind; being of sound mind, memory, and understanding. See NON COMPOS MENTIS. — com'pos-men'tis, n. One who is compos mentis. Colloq.

com-pos'si-ble (kŏm-pŏs'ĭ-b'l), a. [com- + possible: cf. OF. compossible.] Able to coexist with another thing, or to concur in time and space or in conception; consistent. — com-pos'si-bil'i-ty (kŏm-pŏs'ĭ-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n. Rare.

com'post (kŏm'pōst; 277), n. [OF. compost, fr. L. compositus, p. p. See COMPOSITE; cf. COMPOTE.] 1. A composition, mixture, or compound.
2. Cookery. A compote. Obs.
A sad compost of more bitter than sweet. Hammond.
3. Agric. A mixture for fertilizing or renovating land or earth in which plants are grown; now, esp, a fertilizing mixture composed of such substances as peat, leaf mold, manure, lime, etc., thoroughly mingled and decomposed, usually in a heap called a compost heap.
4. = COMPO, mortar or plaster. Rare.

com'post, v. t.; COM'POST-ED; COM'POST-ING. [Cf OF. compostier.] 1. To treat with compost; to manure.
2. To mingle, as different fertilizing substances, in a mass where they will decompose and form into a compost.
3. To treat with compo; to plaster or stucco. Rare.

com-pos'ture (kŏm-pŏs'tūr), n. [OF. *compostur*e, L. compositura, -postura, a joining.] Obs. or Dial. 1. Composition; composure.
2. Manure; compost. Shak.

com-po'sure (-pō'zhūr), n. [From COMPOSE.] 1. Act of composing; that which is composed; a composition. Obs.
Signor Pietro, who had an admirable way both of composure [in music] and teaching Evelyn.
2. Orderly adjustment; disposition. Obs.
3. Frame; make; temperament. Obs.
His composure must be rare indeed Whom these things cannot blemish. Shak.
4. Manner of composing or arranging; posture; style. Obs.
5. A settled state; calmness; sedateness; tranquillity; repose. "We seek peace and composure." Milton.
6. A combination; a union, a bond. Obs. Shak.
Syn.—See EQUANIMITY.

com'po-ta'tion (kŏm'pō-tā'shŭn), n. [L. compotatio; com- + potare to drink.] A drinking or tippling together. — com'po-ta'tion-ship, n.

com'po-ta'tor (kŏm'pō-tā'tẽr), n. [L.] One who drinks with another. — com-po'ta-to-ry (kŏm-pō'tă-tō-rĭ), a.

com'pote (kŏm'pōt), n. [F., OF. composte. Cf. COMPOST.] 1. A preparation of fruit in syrup in such a manner as to preserve its form, either whole, halved, or quartered; as, a compote of pears.
2. (F. pron. kŏn'pŏt') A savory dish of pigeons, quails, or larks, mixed with peas or mushrooms.
3. A compotier.

‖ com'po'tier' (kŏn'pō'tyā'), n.; pl COMPOTIERS (F. -tyā'). [F.] A dish for holding compotes, fruit, etc.

com'pound (kŏm'pound), n [Malay kampung a village.] In the East Indies, India, China, South Africa, etc., an inclosure containing a house, outbuildings, etc., esp. one occupied by foreigners.

com-pound' (kŏm-pound'), v. t.; COM-POUND'ED; COM-POUND'ING. [ME. componen, compounen, L. componere, compositum; com- + ponere to put, set: cf. OF. compondre to arrange, settle. The d is excrescent. See POSITION.]
1. To put together, as elements, ingredients, or parts, in order to form a whole; to combine, mix, or unite.
We have the power of altering and compounding those images into all the varieties of picture. Addison.
2. To form or make up, as a composite product, by combining different elements, ingredients, or parts; as, to compound a medicine. "Compounding a tale." Scott.
3. To compose; to constitute Obs.
His pomp and all what state compounds Shak.
4. To modify or change by combination with some other thing or part; to mingle with something else.
Only compound me with forgotten dust. Shak.
5. To settle amicably; to adjust by agreement; to compromise; to discharge (an obligation) upon terms different from those which were stipulated, claimed, or demanded, as when a lump sum is paid instead of recurring fees, or a less sum is accepted than was asked; specif., Crim. Law, to forbear prosecution of (an offense) for a consideration. (See to compound a felony, below.)
I pray, my lords, let me compound this strife. Shak.
6. Math. a To combine (forces, velocities, etc.) into a single resultant. b To combine (two or more ratios) into a single ratio whose terms are the products of corresponding terms of the component ratios; thus $ac:bd$ is compounded of $a:b$ and $c:d$.
7 Elec. To wind the field magnets of (a dynamo) so that it will be excited by both a shunt and a series current.
8. Mech. To mesh together, as two or more wheels or one wheel with another or others; as, to compound change wheels in a lathe.
to compound a felony, to accept a consideration for forbearing to prosecute, such compounding being now an indictable offense, but originally arising as a step towards civilization by accepting pay in lieu of taking personal vengeance upon the offender. Cf. BOTE, 3.

com-pound', v. i. 1. To unite in a compound. Obs.
2. To effect a composition; to come to terms of agreement or payment; to agree; to settle by a compromise; — usually followed by with before the person participating, and for before the thing compounded or the consideration.
They were at last glad to compound for his bare commitment to the Tower. Clarendon.
Compound for sins they are inclined to
By damning those they have no mind to Hudibras.
3. Specif.: To arrange with the landlord to hold as a compound householder (which see). Eng.

com'pound (kŏm'pound), a. [ME. compouned, p. p. of compounen. See COMPOUND, v. t.] 1. Composed of, or produced by the union of, several elements, ingredients, parts, or things; involving combination; composite.
Compound substances are made up of two or more simple substances. I. Watts.
2 Elec. Compound-wound. See COMPOUND WINDING.
3. Gram. Formed by the aggregation of independent elements; being a compound (which see); as, a compound word or form.
Syn.—See COMPOSITE.
compound addition, subtraction, multiplication, division, the addition, subtraction, etc., of compound numbers. — c. animal, Zoöl., an animal composed of a number of individuals, esp. one of astronomical and ecclesiastical data. Obs. ‖ com'pos vo'ti (kŏm'pŏs vō'tĭ). [L.] Having obtained or gratified one's wish. Adapted from Horace (Ars Poetica, 76). com'pot. Var. of COMPOTE. compot, n. [OF. See COMPUTUS.] Computation; esp., a reckoning of the calendar. Obs. competent, a. Chaucer's equivalent of ful compos. Obs. com'po-tist. † COMPUTIST. com-po'tor, n. [L.] A computator. Rare. com'pound, adv. Mach. As a

viduals, each performing independently some or most of the vital functions, yet organically connected so as to form a united whole called a colony, the individuals being termed zooids; as the corals, polyzoans, and some ascidians. The zooids are formed by gemmation. The closeness of their union and the amount of mutual dependence vary in different cases. They may be all similar, or some may be modified to perform particular functions for the whole colony. — compound arbitration of exchange. See under ARBITRATION. — c. armor or armour, Nav., armor composed of plates of steel welded to plates of wrought iron about twice the thickness of the steel; — no longer used. — c. beam, a built-up beam. — c. chain. See CHAIN, n., 8. — c. circuit, Elec., a circuit composed of a closed circuit coupled with an open circuit. See CLOSE-COUPLED CIRCUIT. — c. curve, Railroads, a curve used in joining two tangents, consisting of the arcs of two or more circles of different diameters joined tangentially with their centers on the same side of the curve. The effect of this is to increase the curvature from nothing to a maximum more gradually, and vice versa, and so lessen the jar from the effect of inertia. — c. determinant, Math., one whose constituents are minors which are variously derived from one or more arrays. — c. division, Math., division of a compound magnitude. — c. engine. Mach. a An engine, esp. a steam engine, in which the working fluid is expanded successively in two distinct stages so as to minimize losses, as from cylinder condensation, and so allow a high ratio of expansion to be used. The steam or other working fluid after expanding in the high-pressure cylinder is exhausted into another cylinder, called low-pressure cylinder (either directly or through a receiver), whence it is finally exhausted, usually into a condenser. An engine using three cylinders successively in this manner is called a triple-expansion engine; one using four cylinders, a quadruple-expansion engine, etc. The cylinders other than the high-pressure and the low-pressure are called intermediate cylinders. b Sometimes, erroneously, a pair of separate single-cylinder engines cranked to the same shaft. — c. ether, Chem., an ester. — c. eye, Zoöl., a form of eye found in many Arthropoda, esp. in insects and crustaceans. It consists essentially of a great number (sometimes thousands) of minute simple eyes, called ommatidia, closely crowded together but optically separated by dark pigment cells. Each ommatidium is narrow and deep, and consists of a sensitive inner portion, or retinula, and an outer refractive portion. They are arranged on a convex basal membrane and are covered externally by a chitinous cornea, generally divided into polygonal facets, one for each ommatidium. In some insects the compound eyes cover much of the surface of the head. In crustaceans they are often on movable stalks. — c. flower, the head of flowers in a composite plant. — c. fraction. Math. See FRACTION. — c. fracture. Surg. See FRACTURE, n. — c. frame, Engin., a frame, as in a bridge truss, in which at least one bar or member forms a component part of more than one cell or simple frame. See TRUSS, Illust. — c. fruit, Bot., a collective fruit. — c. harmonic motion. See under SIMPLE HARMONIC MOTION. — c. householder, in Great Britain, a householder who compounds or arranges with his landlord that his rates shall be included in his rents. — c. inflorescence, Bot., an inflorescence in which each primary branch bears more than one flower. — c. interest, interest both on the original principal and on accrued interest from the time it fell due. — c. interval. Music. See INTERVAL, 6. — c. larceny. Law. See LARCENY. — c. lard, a lard substitute made by compounding cottonseed oil and beef stearin, with or without an admixture of genuine lard. — c. leaf, Bot., a leaf in which the blade is divided to the midrib, forming two or more distinct blades or leaflets on a common axis called the rachis. The leaflets may be themselves compound. The two principal types of compound leaves are the pinnate and the palmate (which see). — c. lever, a machine consisting of two or more levers acting upon each other, as in some kinds of testing and weighing machines. — c. locomotive. See LOCOMOTIVE, n. — c. magnet. = MAGNETIC BATTERY. — c. measure. Music. = COMPOUND TIME. See TIME, n., 10 a. — c. microscope. See MICROSCOPE. — c. motion, a combination of any of the simple motions. — c. number, Math., one involving different denominations, or more than one unit; as 3 yds. 2 ft. 5 in. — c. ovary, Bot., an ovary consisting of more than one carpel. — c. pendulum. See PENDULUM. — c. pier, Arch., a clustered column. — c. proportion, a proportion one of whose equal ratios is a compound ratio. — c. proposition, Logic, a proposition with more than one predicate, or subject, or both. — c. quantity. a Alg. A polynomial, as $a + b - c$, $x^2 - y^3 - z^4$. b Arith. A quantity expressed by a compound number. — c. raceme, Bot., a panicle. — c. radical. Chem. See RADICAL. — c. ratio, Math., the product of two or more ratios; thus ace : bdf is a ratio compounded of the ratios a : b, c : d, and e : f. — c. relative, Gram., a relative pronoun when it serves as its own antecedent, or when it has its antecedent understood, as in, we mean what (= that which) we say; who (= he who) steals, does wrong. — c. rest, Mech., the tool carriage of an engine lathe. — c. screw, Mech., a screw having on the same axis two or more screws with differing pitch (a differential screw), or running in different directions (a right and left screw). — c. sentence, Gram., a sentence having two or more subjects, predicates, or clauses, esp. one having coordinate principal clauses, as distinguished from a complex sentence (which see); as in "I often wondered and admired at this" (Carlyle); "I say unto one go, and he goeth" (Luke vii. 8); "Feversham passed for a good-natured man: but he was a foreigner" (Macaulay). — c. steel, alloy steel. — c. stop. Music, an organ stop having more than one pipe or reed to each key. — c. stress. a Mech. Any stress which is not a simple tensile, compressive, or shear stress. b Phon. See STRESS, n., 4. — c. syllogism, Logic, a syllogism containing one or more compound propositions. — c. time. Music. See TIME, n., 13 a. — c. vault, a vault of any form other than the simplest, as a groined vault, rib vault, fan vault, cloister vault. — c. winding, Elec., a kind or method of winding which combines series winding and shunt winding. See WINDING. A dynamo or motor wound in this way is said to be compound-wound.

ACB, Compound Curve. O_1, O_2, O_3, O_4, O_5, successive centers.

com'pound (kŏm'pound), n. 1. That which is compounded, or formed by the union or mixture of elements, ingredients, or parts; a combination of simples; a composition. Shak.
Rare compound of oddity, frolic, and fun. Goldsmith.
2. A composite number. Obs.
3. Chem. A distinct substance formed by a union of two or more ingredients in definite proportions by weight; as, water is a compound of oxygen and hydrogen. Every definite chemical compound always contains the same elements, united in the same proportions by weight, and with the same internal arrangement.
4. A word form compounded of two or more elements, esp. two or more distinct words; an aggregate of two or more words used as one word in form and meaning. Compounds may arise from any of various reasons, such as: a A relation, or relative position, of the elements which is characteristic of compounds, as distinguished from those recognized for separate words; as in homesick, lovelorn, switchback, childlike, drawbar, bootblack, output, intake, upset, overturn, afterthought, etc. b Mere frequency of occurrence and ease of utterance, except for which the parts would be used as separate words, as in steamboat, railroad, sunshine, seacoast. c Conventional specialization of the word group forming the compound as the name of a certain one out of a number of things which would be included under the phrase if the words were taken in their literal senses; as in blackfish, bluefish, rockfish, sandwort, earthworm, etc. d Attributive use (whether conventionally or for a single occasion only); as in, open-hearth furnace, well-known man, high-water mark, fresh-water fish, jet-black hair, long-looked-for person, never-to-be-forgotten event. e Arbitrary use of a phrase as a conventional name of something, where there is such a transfer of meaning that the literal senses of the words do not indicate the general nature of the meaning intended; as in forget-me-not, love-lies-bleeding, Johnny-jump-up, lion's-tooth, hound's-tongue, bear's-breech, bull's-eye.
When the word "bishopric" was first made, it was made as a compound. Earle.
5. Mach. A compound engine or locomotive.
Syn. — See AGGREGATE.

com-pound'er (kŏm-poun'dẽr), n. 1. One that compounds; as, a compounder of medicines, of an agreement or compromise, or of a debt, obligation, or crime.
Religious houses made compounders
For the horrid actions of their founders Hudibras
2. Formerly (prior to 1853), at Oxford University, one who paid an extraordinary fee for the degree he took, by reason of his having an independent income; — called grand, or petty, compounder according to the amount of the fee.
3. [cap.] Eng. Hist. A Jacobite who favored the restoration of James II., on condition of a general amnesty and of guarantees for the security of the civil and ecclesiastical constitution of the realm.

com-pound'ing, p. pr. & vb. n. of COMPOUND. Specif., vb. n.: a Mach. Act or process of using a working fluid (as steam) expansively in two or more distinct stages, as in the compound engine. b Steam Engines. Act or process of making a simple engine compound.

com'pra-dor', -dore' (kŏm'prȧ-dōr'; kŏm'prȧ-dōr'; 277), n.; pl. -DORS or -DORES (-dōrz'). [Pg. comprador a buyer.] 1. A native house steward employed by Europeans in India and the far East. Obs. or R.
2. A native agent, adviser, and factotum employed by a foreign establishment, as commercial houses, banks, consulates, etc., in China, to have charge of its native employees and act as intermediary in transactions with the natives, often with extraordinary powers in financial matters; hence, a similar Chinese employee in other Oriental houses, as in the Philippines.

com'pre-ca'tion (kŏm'prē-kā'shŭn), n. [L. comprecatio.] A praying together. Bp. Wilkins.

com'pre-hend' (kŏm'prē-hĕnd'), v. t.; COM'PRE-HEND'ED; COM'PRE-HEND'ING. [L. comprehendere, comprehensum; com- + prehendere to grasp, seize; prae before + hendere (in comp.). See GET; cf. COMPRISE.] 1. To take into the mind; to grasp with the understanding; to apprehend the meaning of; to understand.
At a loss to comprehend the question. Irving.
2. To contain; to embrace; to include; as, the states comprehended in the Austrian Empire.
Who hath . . . comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure? Is. xl. 12.
3. To take in or include by construction or implication; to comprise, to imply.
And if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying. Rom xiii. 9.
Syn. — Contain, include, embrace, comprise, inclose, embody, involve, imply, imagine, conceive, grasp, understand. See APPREHEND, CONTAIN.

com'pre-hen'si-ble (-hen'sĭ-b'l), a. [L. comprehensibilis: cf. F. compréhensible.] 1. Capable of being comprehended, included, or comprised God . . is not comprehensible nor circumscribed. Sir T. More
2. Capable of being understood, intelligible; conceivable by the mind.
The horizon sets the bounds . . between what is and what is not comprehensible by us. Locke — com'pre-hen'si-bil'i-ty (-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), com'pre-hen'si-ble-ness, n. — com'pre-hen'si-bly, adv.

com'pre-hen'sion (kŏm'prē-hĕn'shŭn), n. [L. comprehensio: cf. F. compréhension.] 1. Act of comprehending, containing, or comprising; inclusion.
In the Old Testament there is a close comprehension of the New; in the New, an open discovery of the Old Hooker
2. Rhet. A figure by which the name of a whole is put for a part, or that of a part for a whole, or a definite number for an indefinite.
3. Eng. Eccl. Hist. Inclusion of nonconformists in the Established Church by widening the terms of communion.
4. Comprehensiveness. "Words of the widest comprehension." Jowett.
5. A summary; an epitome. Obs.
6. Logic. The totality of attributes which make up the notion signified by a general term; the sum of the characteristics distinguishing a class; intension.
The greater the comprehension of a concept, the less is its extension; and the greater its extension, the less its comprehension. Sir Wm. Hamilton.
7. The capacity of the mind for understanding fully, or by means of the relations which connect particular facts to knowledge in general; the power, act, or process of grasping with the intellect; apperceptive knowledge or an act of apperceptive knowing.
8. Grasping or compression, physically. Obs.

com'pre-hen'sive (kom'prē-hĕn'sĭv), a. 1. Including much; comprising many things; having a wide scope.
A very comprehensive definition. Bentley.
Large and comprehensive ideas Channing.
2. Having the power to comprehend many things; of wide mental grasp. "His comprehensive head." Pope.
Syn. — Extensive, wide, large, full, compendious. comprehensive proposition, Logic, a proposition in which the subject is regarded as comprehending, or including, the predicate. Sir Wm. Hamilton. — c. whole. See WHOLE.
— com'pre-hen'sive-ly, adv. — com'pre-hen'sive-ness, n.

com'pre-hen'sor (-sẽr), n. One who comprehends fully, — esp. with reference to Phil. iii. 12, 13. Obs.

com-press' (kŏm-prĕs'), v. t.; COM-PRESSED' (-prĕst') or COM-PREST'; COM-PRESS'ING. [OF. compresser, L. compressare, freq. of L. comprimere to compress; com- + premere to press. See PRESS.] 1. To press or squeeze together, to force into a narrower compass; to reduce the volume of by pressure; to compact; condense; as, to compress air.
Events of centuries . . compressed within the compass of a single life D. Webster
2. To repress; to restrain. Archaic.
3. To embrace sexually. Obs. Pope.
4. Engin. To subject (a workman) to compression in an air lock. See COMPRESSION, 5.
Syn. — Consolidate, compact, abridge. See CONDENSE.

com'press (kŏm'prĕs), n. [F. compresse.] 1. Med. A folded piece of cloth, pledget of lint, etc., used to cover the dressing of wounds, and so placed as, by the aid of a bandage, to make due pressure on any part; also, a folded cloth applied firmly, wet or dry, to a part, as to allay inflammation or to check hemorrhage.
2. An apparatus for compressing cotton bales, etc.

com-pressed' (kŏm-prĕst'), p. a. 1. Pressed together; compacted; reduced in volume by pressure.
2. a Bot. Flattened lengthwise. b Zoöl. Specif.: Narrow from side to side, and deep in a dorsoventral direction, as the body of many fishes; — opposed to depressed.
compressed air, air under pressure greater than that of the atmosphere. — c. score, Music, a score in a single staff which carries more than one voice part, esp one in which four parts are written on two staves. — c. steel, fluid-compressed steel. — c. yeast, a cake yeast made by filtering the cells from the liquid in which they are grown, subjecting to heavy pressure, and mixing with starch or flour. See YEAST.

com-pres'sion (kŏm-prĕsh'ŭn), n. [L. compressio: cf. F. compression.] 1. Act of compressing, or state of being compressed. "Compression of thought." Johnson.
2. Engin. & Thermodynamics. a The act of compressing the remaining working fluid, as steam, in an engine cylinder after exhaust and before admission; also, the point in the cycle of operations, or on the corresponding indicator diagram, at which this act occurs; also, the period over which it takes place b Act of compressing the working fluid in a heat-engine cycle after admission and before the working stroke, esp in a cycle of operations for an internal combustion engine, also, the period of this compression (called also the compression stroke). Also, the fluid so compressed. See CARNOT'S CYCLE.
3. Mech. The total deformation, or the deformation per unit of length, of a substance, produced by a compressing force.
4. Astron. & Geog. The amount of the polar flattening of a planet, as the earth; the ellipticity.
5. Engin. Subjection of a workman to compressed air in an air lock before he goes into a caisson to work. Cf. DECOMPRESSION.

con'cept (kŏn'sĕpt), n. [L. conceptus, fr. concipere to conceive: cf. F. concept. See CONCEIT.] 1. Conceit; specif., idea; fancy; disposition. Obs.

2. Philos. An idea, as distinguished from a percept. Concepts have been variously identified: a With mental images, as when an image of a horse stands for the idea of a bay, or a sorrel, or both, or when a particular instance symbolizes some universal character, as an isosceles triangle may symbolize a relation true of any triangle. b With terms or their meanings; as, the concept "man;" the concept "origin of species;" — the usual sense in logic. c With any meaning, whether universal or particular, specific or generic, capable of being distinguished from other meanings; thus, the idea of Colosseum is a particular concept; so, also, is that of Christendom, although here a system of phenomena, not a single object, is denoted; the idea of mankind is a universal concept; that of man is also universal, but generic rather than specific in its application.

For the act of conceiving, the term conception should be employed; . . . for the object of conception, or that which is conceived, the term concept should be used. Sir W. Hamilton.

The function by which we thus identify a numerically distinct and permanent subject of discourse is called conception; and the thoughts which are its vehicles are called concepts. Wm. James.

There are two ways in which the mind may bring into explicit consciousness the meaning of a word. It may translate it into an equivalent combination of other words, so as to reconstruct it by successive syntheses of its conceptional constituents, or it may call up a mental picture of the object named. We may call one the verbal, and the other the intuitional, explication of a concept. G. F. Stout.

con-cep'ta-cle (kŏn-sĕp'tă-k'l), n. [L. conceptaculum, fr. concipere to receive. See CONCEIVE.] A receiver or receptacle; a vessel. Obs. Woodward. Hence: Bot. a Orig., a follicle. b In many thallophytic plants, a cavity opening outwards, containing reproductive cells. — con'cep-tac'u-lar (kŏn'sĕp-tăk'ŭ-lẽr), a.

Joy had the like conception in our eyes. Shak.

2. That which is conceived; esp., the embryo or fetus.

3. The power or function of forming abstract and universal ideas; also, the process of forming such ideas.

Conception . . . properly denotes neither the mental state nor what the mental state signifies, but the relation between the two, namely, the function of the mental state in signifying just that particular thing. Wm. James.

The essential character of conception is that in it the universal is thought of as such, in contradistinction to the particular. G. F. Stout.

4. a The image, idea, or notion of any action or thing which is formed in the mind. b An ideal scheme, plan, or sense of relationship among the objects of thought. c Any of the categories as involved in a process of the mind; a concept; notion; universal. In psychology, conception is used in specific contrast to perception, and implies recognition or use of the universal element as distinguished from the particular. In philosophy, conception refers to the universal element wherever it occurs, in perception as well as in abstract thought.

5. Conceit or fancy; notion; affected sentiment or thought. Obs.

He . . is full of conceptions, points of epigram, and witticisms. Dryden.

6. Mental originating of an idea or plan.

7. Original idea; purpose; design.

Note this dangerous conception. Shak.

Syn. — Idea, notion, apprehension, comprehension.

con-cep'tu-al-ism (-ĭz'm), n. Metaph. A theory, intermediate between realism and nominalism, that universals exist in the mind as subjects of discourse or as predicates which may be properly affirmed of reality. Pierre Abélard (1079–1142), a French Scholastic, is the philosopher with whom conceptualism is especially identified. Abélard taught that, while universals exist only psychically, yet they correspond to real similarities in things, which previous to creation existed in the mind of God. See NOMINALISM, REALISM. — con-cep'tu-al-ist, n. — con-cep'tu-al-is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk), a.

con-cep'tu-al'i-ty (-ăl'ĭ-tĭ), n. Power or faculty of forming conceptions; power of abstract thought.

F. concis.] 1. Expressing much in a few words; condensed; brief and compact; — used of style in writing or speaking.
The concise style, which expresseth not enough, but leaves somewhat to be understood. B. Jonson.
2. Cut short; brief; — of time.
Syn. — Brief, condensed, summary, comprehensive, pregnant; pointed, neat, pithy, crisp. — CONCISE, TERSE, SUCCINCT, COMPENDIOUS, SENTENTIOUS, LACONIC, CURT agree in the idea of brevity in speech (see BLUFF). CONCISE (the opposite of diffuse) implies clean-cut brevity, attained by excision of the superfluous; as, "that energy of epithet, so concise and telling" (Stevenson). TERSE adds to concise the implication of finish, elegance, or point; as, terse as an epigram; "His [Dante's] verse . . . has the terseness and edge of steel" (Lowell). SUCCINCT implies compression, often with a touch of crispness; as, "Dryden imported a trimmer and succincter dress" (Landor). COMPENDIOUS (see COMPENDIUM) stresses rather the large or weighty inclusiveness of the matter summarized; as, "Man . . . an extract or compendious image of the world" (Bacon); "The compendious scholarly words which save so much trouble" (T. E. Brown). SENTENTIOUS suggests the pithiness of an aphorism or a maxim; as, "sententious and oracular brevity" (Gibbon); "The Chinese are grave and sententious" (Goldsmith). LACONIC implies a certain disdain for mere words and a determination to use no more of them than may be necessary; it often suggests pithiness and sometimes brusqueness; as, "I cannot exactly say with Cæsar, 'Veni, vidi, vici:' however, the most important part of his laconic account of success applies to my present situation" (Byron). CURT denotes excessive brevity or rude conciseness; as, "Banquo's cuit answer, 'Too cruel anywhere'" (A. C. Bradley). See SHARP; cf. CONDENSE.
He [Aristotle] has a dry conciseness, that makes one imagine one is perusing a table of contents rather than a book. Gray.
For our language, unless it be very severely chastised, has not the terseness, nor our measure the music, of the Greek. Cowper.
A strict and succinct style is that where you can take away nothing without loss, and that loss to be manifest. B. Jonson
To prove Duke Paul heir to the crown, [she] assumed it herself. The proof was compendious and unanswerable. Walpole.
Sententious distichs which have passed into conversation, and are added as proverbial axioms to the general stock of practical knowledge. Johnson.
Robert Burns . . . always spoke to the point, and in general with a sententious brevity. His moody thoughtfulness and laconic style of expression were both inherited. Robert Chambers
The cut hammering way with which we usually try to nail down a vague mind to imperative facts G Eliot.
— con-cise'ly (kŏn-sīs'lĭ), adv. — con-cise'ness, n.

con-den'sa-ble (kŏn-dĕn'să-b'l), a. Capable of being condensed. — con-den'sa-bil'i-ty (-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n.

con-den'sa-ry (-rĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). An establishment in which condensing, as of milk, is carried on; a condensery.

con-den'sate (-sāt), v. t. & i.; -SAT-ED (-sāt-ĕd); -SAT-ING (-sāt-ĭng). To condense. Obs. or R. Hammond.

con-den'sate (-sāt), a. [L. condensatus, p. p.] Made dense, condensed. Obs. or Archaic. — n. Chem. & Physics. A product of condensation.

con'den-sa'tion (kŏn'dĕn-sā'shŭn), n. [L. condensatio: cf. F. condensation.] 1. Act or process of condensing or of being condensed; state of being condensed; also, a product of condensation.
He [Goldsmith] was a great and perhaps an unequaled master of the arts of selection and condensation. Macaulay.
2. Physics. Act or process of reducing, by depression of temperature or increase of pressure, etc., to another and denser form, as air to the condition of a liquid, or steam to water. See CYLINDER CONDENSATION.
3. Chem. A rearrangement or concentration of the different constituents of one or more substances (with or without elimination of water or other unimportant by-product) into a distinct and definite compound of greater complexity and molecular weight, often resulting in an increase of density; as, the condensation of oxygen into ozone, or of acetone into mesitylene; a condensation product.
4. Fig., concentration. Rare. Milman.
5. Phon. See ASSIMILATORY CONDENSATION.

con-dense' (kŏn-dĕns'), v. t.; CON-DENSED' (-dĕnst'); CON-DENS'ING. [L. condensare; con- + densare to make thick or dense, densus thick, dense: cf. F. condenser. See DENSE; cf. CONDENSATE.] 1. To make more close, compact, or dense; to compress or concentrate into a smaller compass; to consolidate; abridge; epitomize; concentrate; intensify.
Dilated or condensed, bright or obscure. Milton
The secret course pursued at Brussels and at Madrid may be condensed into the usual formula, dissimulation, procrastination, and again dissimulation. Motley
2. Chem. & Physics. To subject to condensation.
Syn. — Compact, unite, combine; harden, thicken, solidify; boil down, intensify; bind, tighten, squeeze, narrow; reduce, diminish, lessen; abridge, epitomize. — CONDENSE, CONSOLIDATE, CONCENTRATE, COMPRESS, CONTRACT, CONSTRICT agree in denoting reduction in compass without necessarily implying reduction in content (see ABRIDGE). CONDENSE denotes reduction to greater compactness, usually of what is already more or less homogeneous; as, to condense a gas to a liquid, a paragraph to a sentence; CONSOLIDATE (see JOIN) expresses the union in a more compact whole of previously distinct elements; as, to consolidate companies or funds; CONCENTRATE implies reduction either by massing about a single point, or by elimination of all save essential elements; as, to concentrate troops, a chemical solution; COMPRESS implies reduction by relatively uniform pressure or by other influence applied or exerted from without; as, to compress air, a bale of cotton; CONTRACT implies a drawing together, usually through some force exerted from within, sometimes by combination or elision (see abbreviate, under ABRIDGE); as, to contract the brow, a syllable; CONSTRICT differs from contract in that the drawing together is usually through pressure exerted by the tightening of an encircling ligature; as, the pores of certain bodies are constricted under the influence of cold. See DECREASE.
The writer of short studies, having to condense in a few pages the events of a whole lifetime, . . . is bound . . . to make that condensation logical and striking Stevenson.
The insurmountable obstacle to believing the Iliad a consolidated work of several poets. M. Arnold.
The science of that age was all divination, clairvoyance, . . . seeking in an instant of vision to concentrate a thousand experiences W. Pater
A drama must compress into two or three hours material which may be diffused through three volumes or a novel, because spectators are more impatient than readers. G. H. Lewes.
The mind contracts herself, and shrinketh in, con-dense' (kŏn-dĕns'), v. i. 1. To become more compact, or dense, to be reduced into a denser form.
And to herself she gladly doth retire. Sir J. Davies.

2. Chem. Specif., to undergo condensation; — said of substances which unite, or of one which becomes polymerized.
3. To reduce to a concise or epitomized form of expression.

con-dense', a. [L. condensus.] Condensed; compact; dense. Obs. or R.
The huge condense bodies of planets. Bentley

con-densed' (kŏn-dĕnst'), p. a. That has been subjected to condensation (in any sense); esp.: a Reduced to a dense or more dense form; specif., reduced from the gaseous to the liquid state. b Rhet. Made succinct or compact in expression or details.
condensed letter, type, etc., Print., a letter, type, etc., which is thin and vertically elongated. See TYPE.
☞ This line is printed in condensed gothic.

con-dens'er (-dĕn'sẽr), n. 1. One that condenses; as, a condenser of aqueous vapor; a condenser of writings.
2. Specif.: a An instrument for compressing air or gases, as one consisting of a cylinder having a movable piston to force the air into a receiver, and a valve to prevent its escape. b An instrument for concentrating electricity by the effect of induction between conducting plates separated by a nonconducting plate. The effect is increased by multiplying this apparatus many times. Thus one form of commercial condenser is made up of numerous layers of tin foil separated by paraffin paper, connected alternately to the negative terminal from one end, and to the positive terminal from the other. c A lens or mirror, usually of short focal distance, used to concentrate light upon an object. d Spinning. A device which doffs the web from the carding machine and separates and condenses it into slivers of soft yarn. e Any of various pieces of apparatus for condensing vapors to a liquid or solid state, as a tube surrounded by cold water. In the steam engine it usually consists of a box into which water is sprayed (jet condenser) or containing a series of tubes through which cold water circulates (surface condenser), for condensing the exhaust steam. The evaporative condenser consists of a nest of tubes or a radiator cooled by the evaporation of dripping water.

Condenser b of Epinus: A, B Conducting Plates; C Non-conducting Plate.

Jet Condenser Cold condensing water enters at 1, passes down pipe 2 through spraying cone 3 into the enlarged part of the chamber, where it meets and mixes with exhaust steam which enters through 4, the mixture passing in through 5 to the air pumps.

con-dens'ing, p pr. & vb. n. of CONDENSE.
condensing electroscope, Physics, a form of electroscope in which an increase of sensibility is obtained by the use of a condenser. — c. engine. a An air condenser. Obs. b See STEAM ENGINE.

con'de-scend' (kŏn'dē-sĕnd'), v. i.; CON'DE-SCEND'ED; CON'DE-SCEND'ING. [F. condescendre, L. condescendere; con- + descendere. See DESCEND.] 1. Lit., to come or go down; to descend. Obs.
2. To stoop or descend; to let one's self down; to waive the privilege of rank or dignity; to accommodate one's self to an inferior. "Condescend to men of low estate" Rom. xii. 16.
Spain's mighty monarch,
In gracious clemency, does condescend,
On these conditions, to become your friend. Dryden.
Often used ironically.
Those who thought they were honoring me by condescending to address a few words to me F. W. Robinson.
3. To concede; to submit with deference; to assent. Obs.
All parties willingly condescended hereunto. R. Carew.
4. To come definitely (to), or to fix or settle (upon), some particular thing or point; also, with upon, to mention; specify. Obs. or Scot. Chaucer.
Syn. — CONDESCEND, DEIGN, VOUCHSAFE. CONDESCEND implies a courteous or patronizing waiving of real or assumed superiority; as, "No beggar ever felt him condescend, no prince presume" (Lowell); "They insult me with their insolent condescension" (Byron). DEIGN implies con-den'si-ty, n. Quality or state of being condensed.

gracious condescension; it frequently occurs in negative sentences with the implication of a haughty or contemptuous refusal; as, "If a prince shall deign to be familiar, . . . shall his condescension therefore unking him?" (South); "Yet the governor was so . . . arrogant, that he despised all these reiterated overtures, and did not deign even to return the least answer to them" (Anson). VOUCHSAFE (often ironical) implies the granting or concession of something as a favor or indulgence; as, "a beardless young sprig, who patronized him, and vouchsafed to ask him whether he found London was changed" (Thackeray).

con'de-scend' (kŏn'dē-sĕnd'), v. i. 1. To concede; to deign to give; to consent to.

2. To fix or settle upon; to specify. Scot.

The party was . . . allowed to condescend who the witnesses were. Erskine's Principles.

con'de-scend'ence (kŏn'dē-sĕn'dĕns), n. [Cf. F. condescendance.] 1. Condescension; compliance; concession.

2. A specification of particulars. Scot. Specif.: Scots Law. In criminal actions, the pleading of the pursuer in which the facts material to the action must be set forth. This pleading and the note of pleas in law (which contains the legal propositions on which the action is based) are annexed to the summons, and form a part of it.

con'de-scen'sion (-sĕn'shŭn), n. [L. condescensio.] Act of condescending; voluntary descent from one's rank or dignity in intercourse with an inferior; affability or complaisance, esp. toward inferiors.

Such a dignity and condescension . . . as are suitable to a superior nature. Addison.

Syn. — Complaisance, courtesy, affability.

‖ con-dic'ti-o (kŏn-dĭk'shĭ-ō), n. [L., fr. condicere to make a formal claim. See CON-; DICTION.] Roman Law. A formal claim for a thing; hence, an action against a person originally for a certain sum of money, and later for anything definite and certain other than money, then called con-dic'ti-o tri'ti-ca'ri-a (trĭt'ĭ-kā'rĭ-a). — con-dic'ti-o ex le'ge (ĕks lē'jē), an action to enforce a statutory prohibition or order. — con-dic'ti-o fur-ti'va (fûr-tī'va), an action for a stolen thing. — con-dic'ti-o in-de'bi-ti (ĭn-dĕb'ĭ-tī), an action to recover money paid under a mistake of fact, not, generally, of law.

con-dign' (kŏn-dīn'; formerly also con'dign, as in Shak.), a [F. condigne, L. condignus very worthy; con- + dignus worthy. See DEIGN.] 1. Of equal worth or dignity. Obs.

2. Worthy; suitable; deserving; fit. Obs. or Archaic.

Herselt of all that rule she deemed most condign. Spenser.

3. Deserved; adequate; fit; suitable. Obs. or Archaic, except of punishment. "Condign censure." Milman.

Syn. — CONDIGN, SEVERE. CONDIGN is often wrongly used, with reference to punishment, as if exactly synonymous with SEVERE. Its proper sense is "deserved, appropriate, merited." Condign punishment will be severe only when the crime merits severity.

Unless it were a bloody murderer . . .
I never gave them condign punishment. Shak.

con-dig'ni-ty (kŏn-dĭg'nĭ-tĭ), n. [Cf. F. condignité.] 1. Merit; worthiness. Obs. Sylvester.

2. Specif.: Scholastic Theol. Merit acquired by works performed in a state of grace, which can justly claim the reward of eternal life from God; — opposed to congruity.

Such a worthiness of condignity, and proper merit of the heavenly glory, cannot be found in any the best, most perfect, and excellent of created beings. Bp. Bull.

con'di-ment (kŏn'dĭ-mĕnt), n. [L. condimentum, fr. condire: cf. F. condiment. See CONDITE.] Something used to give relish to food, and to gratify the taste; a pungent and appetizing substance, as pepper or mustard; seasoning.

con'di-men'tal (-mĕn'tăl), a. Of, pertaining to, or like, a condiment.

con'dis-ci'ple (kŏn'dĭ-sī'p'l), n. [L. condiscipulus. See DISCIPLE.] A fellow disciple or student; a schoolfellow.

con-dite' (kŏn-dīt'), a. [L. conditus, p. p. of condire to pickle, season.] Preserved; pickled; seasoned. Obs.

con-dite', v. t. To pickle, to preserve; season; as, to condite pears, quinces, etc. Obs. Jer. Taylor.

con-di'tion (kŏn-dĭsh'ŭn), n. [F., fr. L. conditio (better condicio) agreement, compact, condition; con- + a root signifying to show, point out, akin to dicere to say, dicare to proclaim, dedicate. See TEACH, TOKEN.] 1. Something established or agreed upon as a requisite to the doing or taking effect of something else; a stipulation or provision; hence, an agreement determining one or more such prerequisites; a covenant.

Many are apt to believe remission of sins, but they believe it without the condition of repentance. Jer. Taylor.

Such sum or sums as are expressed in the condition. Shak.

2. Law. A provision in a contract, conveyance, grant, or will, providing that the beginning, vesting, rescission, or a modification, of an estate or interest in property or of a personal obligation shall depend upon the occurrence or nonoccurrence of an uncertain event, which may or may not happen; also, the event itself. Impossible, illegal, and repugnant conditions are void, so that if subsequent the estate vests or the obligation accrues absolutely, and if precedent it never vests or accrues. In the Civil Law a condition is classified with reference to the control over its fulfillment by the person to be benefited thereby, as: casual, when it is not in his control in any way, but depends entirely on accident; mixed, when controlled jointly by him and a third person, as "If you marry my cousin, I will," etc.; potestative, when in some degree within his power, as "If you cut down a certain tree, I will," etc. It is called suspensory when it suspends until its fulfillment the operation of that which depends upon it; resolutory, when its fulfillment terminates such operation. At the common law, a condition is precedent when its fulfillment must precede the vesting of an estate or the accruing of a right, as where an estate is granted to A upon condition that he marry B: subsequent, where the effect of its fulfillment is to defeat or modify a previously vested estate or accrued obligation, as where an estate is granted to A so long as he shall dwell in my house, or the purchase of a horse upon condition that he shall prove kind and sound. Other classes are conditions in deed, or express conditions, insensible conditions, or those which are repugnant; repugnant, when inconsistent with and contrary to the nature of the estate granted or obligation imposed; and various others whose nature is sufficiently shown by the designating adjective, such as express, implied, restrictive, etc.

3. That which exists as an occasion of something else; a circumstance essential to the appearance or occurrence of something else; a prerequisite. Condition is distinguished from cause only in the place which it holds with respect to interest or attention. All true (that is, necessary) conditions are causes; but for purposes of experiment, or by reason of special interest, we distinguish a prime condition, or direct cause, from the secondary conditions, or indirect causes. See CAUSE.

Drudgery . . is the condition of all success. P. G. Hamerton.

4. That which limits or modifies the existence or character of something; a circumstance of action or being; an environmental incident; a restriction or qualification. "The new conditions of life." Darwin.

5. A mode or state of being; as, matter in a gaseous condition; specif.: a Social estate; rank; position.

I am in my condition
A prince, Miranda, I do think, a king Shak.

O God, . . . we humbly beseech thee for all sorts and conditions of men. Bk. of Com. Prayer.

b State with reference to mental or moral nature, temperament, character, or disposition. Archaic.

The condition of a saint and the complexion of a devil. Shak.

6. A characteristic or trait (of a person or object); pl. (of persons) manners; hence, nature or character in general. Obs. "Here is the catalogue of her conditions." Shak.

It seemed to us a condition and property of divine powers and beings to be hidden and unseen to others. Bacon.

7. Proper or good condition, as for work; state of being "fit;" as, the crew is out of condition.

8. Math. A state of case that must be if some other state of case is to be. Such is a necessary condition, which need not be a sufficient condition. This latter brings about of itself the state of which it is the condition, but need not be a necessary condition. The more important conditions are both necessary and sufficient. Conditions are expressed by equations of condition. Thus the necessary and sufficient condition that the quadratic $ax^2 + 2bx + c = 0$ shall have equal roots is $b^2 - ca = 0$.

9. Logic. A proposition on the truth of which the truth of another proposition is directly dependent. Cf. HYPOTHESIS.

10. Gram. A clause expressing a condition, or prerequisite; — called specif. the protasis of a conditional sentence

11. In an educational institution, the requirement made of a student who is conditioned; also, the subject in which the student is conditioned. See CONDITION, v. t., 6. U. S

12. Hop Growing. The lupulin, or fine yellow powder on the strobiles of the hop plant.

Syn. — Situation, circumstances, station, case, mode, plight, predicament; stipulation, qualification, requisite, article, provision, arrangement. See STATE.

on or upon condition (that), used for if in introducing conditional sentences; — sometimes formerly shortened to condition. "Upon condition thou wilt swear to pay him tribute . . . thou shalt be placed as viceroy under him." Shak. "I would I had not, condition she had all." Heywood.

con-di'tion (kŏn-dĭsh'ŭn), v. i.; -DI'TIONED (-dĭsh'ŭnd); -DI'TION-ING. 1. To make conditions or terms; to stipulate.

Pay me back my credit,
And I 'll condition with ye. Beau. & Fl.

2. Metaph. To limit and make definite an object of thought.

To think of a thing is to condition. Sir W. Hamilton.

3. To attain proper condition. "Mild running ales, which are to 'condition' rapidly." Encyc. Brit.

con-di'tion, v. t. [Cf. F. conditionner, LL. conditionare.] 1 To stipulate; to bargain for; to contract; to agree.

It was conditioned between Saturn and Titan, that Saturn should put to death all his male children Raleigh.

2. To invest with, limit by, or subject to, conditions; to burden or qualify by a condition; to make conditional (on); as, his tenure is conditioned on good behavior; to govern or restrict as a condition; to exist as the condition of; as, his melancholy conditions his thoughts.

Seas, that daily gain upon the shore,
Have ebb and flow conditioning their march. Tennyson.

3. Metaph. To limit or restrict in thought or conception.

4. Law. To charge with a condition or conditions; as, a bond conditioned for the payment of money.

5. Com. a To test or assay, as silk, wool, or cotton, to ascertain the proportion of moisture it contains; to sample. b To treat, as cotton yarn, so as to restore the natural moisture driven off in the processes of manufacture.

6. In an educational institution, to put (a student) under conditions; to require to pass a new examination or to make up a specified study, as a condition of remaining in one's class or in the institution.

7. To put into proper or good condition; to make "fit," as a race horse.

con-di'tion-al (-ăl), a. [F. conditionnel, L. condicionalis.] 1. Of or pertaining to a condition or conditions; esp., containing, implying, subject to, or depending on, a condition or conditions; not absolute; made or granted on certain terms; as, a conditional promise; — often with on or upon; as, my stay is conditional on his plans.

2. Specif.: a Gram. & Logic. Expressing a condition or supposition; pertaining to the expression of a condition; introducing, containing, or implying, a supposition; as, a conditional word, clause, mode, or tense. "Provided that" and "supposing that" are conditional phrases.

A conditional proposition is one which asserts the dependence of one categorical proposition on another. Whately.

The words hypothetical and conditional may be . . used synonymously. J. S. Mill.

The combination of should and would with the infinitive (should see, would see), when used in the principal clause of conditional sentences, is called the conditional mood. H. Sweet.

b Math. Stating the conditions; as, conditional equations. conditional baptism. Eccl. = HYPOTHETICAL BAPTISM. — c. estate, Law, an estate held upon a condition, precedent or subsequent. See CONDITION, n., 2. — c. fee, Law, at common law, a fee granted to a man and the heirs, or some class of the heirs, of his body. This limitation was as early as the 13th century construed as a condition which was fulfilled by the birth of such issue, so that the grantee could alienate or encumber the property during his life; but the fee reverted unless the grantee left such an heir surviving or alienated the estate during his life. By the statute of Westminster II. such estates were converted in fees tail. See FEE TAIL. — c. immortality, Theol., the theory that man is not by nature immortal, but may achieve immortality by development in accordance with divine law or obtain it by faith in Christ. — c. lease, a lease of crownland subject to prescribed conditions as to payment of rent, residence, etc., which the holder of a conditional purchase may acquire to an amount not greater than three times the area of his conditional purchase, and which may at any time be converted into an additional conditional purchase on certain prescribed conditions. Australia. — c. proposition, Logic, a proposition expressing the dependence of one fact or state upon another; — with some writers, including also the disjunctive form. — c. purchase, a purchase in fee simple of crownlands, subject to the fulfillment of certain conditions laid down in the Land Acts. This system of taking up lands is also known as the selection, or, sometimes, free-selection, system. See SELECT. Australia. — c. sale, Law, a sale in which the vesting of title in the purchaser, notwithstanding delivery to him, is made to depend upon the due performance of conditions made a part of the terms of sale. In many jurisdictions such sales must be recorded to be effectual against bona fide purchasers. Cf. CHATTEL MORTGAGE, HIRE PURCHASE. — c. syllogism, Logic, a syllogism one or both of whose premises, and hence the conclusion, are conditional propositions.

con-di'tion-al (kŏn-dĭsh'ŭn-ăl), n. A conditional word, clause, mode, tense, or proposition.

con-di'tion-al'i-ty (kŏn-dĭsh'ŭn-ăl'ĭ-tĭ), n. Quality or state of being conditional.

con-di'tion-al-ly, adv. In a conditional manner; subject to a condition or conditions; not absolutely.

conditionally convergent series, Math., one in which the limit of the sum of n terms depends upon the arrangement of the terms, as the series $1 - \frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{3} - \frac{1}{4} + \ldots$.

con-di'tion-ate (kŏn-dĭsh'ŭn-ŭt), a. [LL. conditionatus, p. p.] Conditional, conditioned. — n. Something conditioned; a contingency.

con-di'tion-ate (-āt), v. t.; CON-DI'TION-AT'ED (-āt'ĕd); CON-DI'TION-AT'ING (-āt'ĭng). 1. To qualify by conditions; to affect or limit as a condition.

2. To put under conditions; to render conditional. Rare.

con-di'tion-ate, v. i. To make conditions, to stipulate.

con-di'tioned (-ŭnd), p. a. Subjected to conditions; conditional — n. Philos. With the, that which is determined (or made what it is) by something else. Cf. UNCONDITIONED, n.

con-do'la-to-ry (kŏn-dō'lă-tō-rĭ), a. Expressing condolence.

con-dole' (kŏn-dōl'), v. i.; CON-DOLED' (-dōld'); CON-DOL'ING (-dōl'ĭng). [L. condolere; con- + dolere to feel pain, grieve: cf. OF. condoloir, F. condouloir. See DOLEFUL.] 1. To sorrow much; to grieve; to lament. Obs. Shak.

2. To express sympathetic sorrow or condolence; to grieve in sympathy; — usually followed by with; as, to condole with a friend on a death in his family.

con-dole', v. t 1. To lament or grieve over; to express one's sympathetic sorrow at (another's misfortune).

I come not, Samson, to condole thy chance. Milton.

2. To grieve with; to express one's sympathy for. Obs.

Let us condole the knight. Shak.

con-dole'ment (-mĕnt), n. 1. Sorrow; mourning. Obs.

con'duct, n. A hired person; specif.: a An employee. Obs. b A hired chaplain. Obs., exc. at Eton College, Eng.

con-duct'ance (kŏn-dŭk′tăns), n. [conduct, v. + -ance.] Elec. Conducting power; — the reciprocal of resistance. A suggested unit is the mho, the reciprocal of the ohm.

Conductance is an attribute of any specified conductor, and refers to its shape, length, and other factors. Conductivity is an attribute of any specified material without direct reference to its shape or other factors Sloane's Elec. Dict.

con-duct'i-ble (-tĭ-b'l), a. Capable of conducting or being conducted. — con-duct'i-bil'i-ty (-bĭl′ĭ-tĭ), n.

con-duct'ing, p. pr. & vb. n. of CONDUCT.

conducting sheath, Bot., the sheath formed of elongated parenchymatous cells investing the vascular bundles, and extending from the stem into the mesophyll of the leaves. The cells serve to transport carbohydrates from the leaves. — c. tissue, Bot., a loose cellular tissue in the interior of the style, adapted to facilitate the growth of the pollen tubes down to the ovules. — c. transportation, Accounting, a heading designed to cover those items of expense which arise in the daily service of trains and terminals, as distinct from repairs or capital charges.

con-duc'tion (-shŭn), n. [L. conductio a bringing together: cf. F. conduction.] 1. Act of conducting; hence, guidance; management, direction; generalship; skill. Obs.

2. Act of conducting or conveying, as water through a pipe.

3. Specif.: a Bot. The transfer of soluble foods, water, and other substances from one part of a plant to another. b Physics. Transmission through, or by means of, a conductor; also, conductivity; — distinguished, in the case of heat, from convection and radiation.

[The] communication [of heat] from one body to another when they are in contact, or through a homogeneous body from particle to particle, constitutes conduction. Amer. Cyc con-duc-ti'tious (kŏn′dŭk-tĭsh′ŭs), a. [L. conducticius, -itius, hired.] Hired; open to, or kept for, hire.

con-duc'tive (kŏn-dŭk′tĭv), a. 1. Having the quality or power of conducting.

2. Physics. Possessing conductivity; pertaining to conduction, as of electricity; as, the conductive power of copper. conductive tissue. Bot. a = CONDUCTING TISSUE. b = VASCULAR TISSUE.

con-duc-tiv'i-ty (kŏn′dŭk-tĭv′ĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). Physics Quality or power of conducting, or of receiving and transmitting, as heat, electricity, etc. Specif., specific electric conductance, usually understood to be the conductance of a prism having a length of one centimeter and a cross section of one square centimeter. See CONDUCTANCE, cit.

conduct money. Money paid or to pay for the conveyance of some one; money for traveling expenses, as of a witness or a man newly enlisted; specif., Eng. Hist., money to defray expenses of transporting to the rendezvous the men furnished by a hundred for the king's army; esp., a tax exacted as such by Charles I. Cf. COAT MONEY.

con'duc-tom'e-ter (kŏn′dŭk-tŏm′ĕ-tẽr), n. [See CONDUCT, v., -METER.] Physics. Any instrument for measuring conductivity, specif. one for comparing the rates at which rods of different materials transmit heat.

con-duc'tor (kŏn-dŭk′tẽr), n. [LL., a carrier, transporter, L., a lessee.] 1. One that conducts (in any sense).

2. A person who conducts or leads; leader; guide; escort.

9. Surg. A grooved sound or staff used for directing instruments, as lithontriptic forceps, etc.; a director.

10. Physics. A substance or body capable of readily transmitting electricity, heat, or the like. Some of the best electric conductors, in order of decreasing conductivity, are: silver, copper, gold, aluminium, zinc, platinum, iron, nickel, tin, lead, antimony, mercury, bismuth.

11. A lightning rod.

12. [L., a lessee.] Law. A hirer, as a bailee or lessee.

con'duit (kŏn′dĭt; formerly, and still by some, kŭn′dĭt), n. [ME. condyt, conduyte, F. conduit, fr. LL. conductus escort, conduit. See CONDUCT, n.] 1. An artificial channel, as a pipe, or a natural channel or passage, for conveying water or fluid; an aqueduct, canal, or channel; as, the conduit of a volcano.

All the conduits of my blood froze up. Shak.

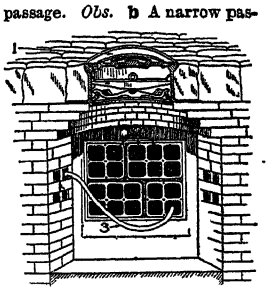
2. A structure from which water issues, as for distribution; specif., a fountain. Obs. or Archaic.

3. Arch. a In general, a passage. Obs. b A narrow passage for private communication.



Section of Conduit for Telephone Wires, at a Manhole. 1 Manhole Cover; 2 Ducts; 3 Cable passing from main conduit to a cross conduit

4. A tube or trough for receiving and protecting electric wires, as for telephones, conduit railways, etc.

5. Act of conducting (water) through a channel. Obs.

6. Music. a A codetta, or short connective passage. b = CONDUCTUS.

conduit pipe. A tubular conduit. Also fig.

conduit system. Elec. A system of electric traction, esp. for light railways, in which the actuating current passes along a wire or rail laid in an underground conduit, from which the current is "picked up" by a plow or other device fixed to the car or electric locomotive. Hence conduit railway.

Cross Section of Roadbed and Conduit for Electric Railway. 1, 1 Rails; 2 Slot for Underground Trolley, or Plow; 3 Insulated Conducting Bars or Rails; 4 Half of Frame.

con-du'pli-cate (kŏn-dū′plĭ-kāt), a. [L. conduplicatus, p. p. of conduplicare. See DUPLICATE.] Bot. Folded lengthwise along the midrib, so that the halves are applied together by their upper faces; — said of leaves or petals in vernation or æstivation.

con-du'pli-ca'tion (-kā′shŭn), n. [L. conduplicatio.] A doubling; a duplication.

con-dur'rite (kŏn-dûr′ĭt), n. Min. A soft black variety of domeykite, from the Condurrow mine, Cornwall.

con'dy-lar (kŏn′dĭ-lẽr), a. Anat. Of or pertaining to a condyle. — condylar foramen. Anat. = CONDYLOID FORAMEN.

Con/dy-lar'thra (-lar′thrȧ), n. pl. [NL. See CONDYLE; ARTHRON.] Paleon. A suborder of extinct Eocene Ungulata having many primitive characters, some of which connect them with the Creodonta. They were more or less completely plantigrade, with five-toed limbs and a third femoral trochanter. Phenacodus is the best-known genus. — con/dy-lar'throus (-thrŭs), a.

con'dyle (kŏn′dĭl), n. [L. condylus knuckle, joint, Gr. κόνδυλος: cf. F. condyle.] 1. Anat. & Zoöl. An articular prominence on a bone; — applied esp. to such as occur in pairs likened to a pair of knuckles, specif. to those of the occipital bone for articulation with the atlas, those at the distal end of the humerus and femur, and those of the lower jaw. Birds and reptiles differ from mammals and amphibians in having a single median articular process, also called a condyle, on the occipital bone.

2. Zoöl. A rounded process of the hard integument in the articulations of the limbs of arthropods.

con-dyl'i-on (kŏn-dĭl′ĭ-ŏn), n. [Gr. κονδύλιον, dim. of κόνδυλος knuckle.] Craniol. The lateral tip of the condyle of the jaw. See CRANIOMETRY, Illust.

con'dy-loid (kŏn′dĭ-loid), a. [condyle + -oid.] Anat. Shaped like, pertaining to, or situated near, a condyle. condyloid foramen, Anat., a foramen in front of each condyle of the occipital bone which transmits the hypoglossal nerve; — sometimes called the anterior condylar foramen, as a second, or posterior, foramen is often present behind the condyle. — c joint, Anat., an articulation in which an ovoid head is received into an elliptical cavity, permitting of all movements except axial rotation.

con'dy-lo'ma (-lō′mȧ), n.; pl. -LOMATA (-lō′mȧ-tȧ; -lō′mȧ-tȧ). [NL., fr. Gr. κονδύλωμα, fr. κόνδυλος knuckle. See -OMA.] 1. Med. A wartlike new growth on the outer skin or adjoining mucous membrane, usually occurring near the anus and genital organs. There are two kinds of condylomata, the pointed (condyloma acuminatum) and the broad (condyloma latum), the latter of syphilitic origin.

2. Veter. In cloven-hoofed animals, a hyperplasia of the papillary layer of the skin covering the interdigital space as a result of chronic inflammation; — sometimes so called.

con/dy-lom'a-tous (-lŏm′ȧ-tŭs; -lō′mȧ-tŭs), a. Of, pertaining to, or characterized by, condylomata.

Con/dy-lop'o-da (-lŏp′ō-dȧ), n. pl. [NL.; Gr. κόνδυλος knuckle, joint + -poda.] Zoöl. a The Arthropoda; — so named from their jointed limbs. b The Arthropoda, excluding the Malacopoda. — con-dyl'o-pod (kŏn-dĭl′ō-pŏd), a. & n. — con/dy-lop'o-dous (kŏn/dĭ-lŏp′ō-dŭs), a.

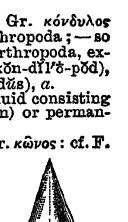
Con/dy's flu'id (kŏn′dĭz). A disinfecting fluid consisting of an aqueous solution of manganate (green) or permanganate (red) of either sodium or potassium.

cone (kōn), n. [L. conus cone (in sense 1), Gr. κῶνος: cf. F. cône.] 1. Geom. a Primarily and specifically, a right circular cone, a solid generated by the rotation of a right triangle about one of its legs as axis. b A solid bounded by a circular or other closed plane base and the surface formed by line segments joining every point of the border of the base to a common point called the vertex. c Generally, a conical surface; that is, any surface traced by a moving right line passing through a fixed vertex.



Right Circular Cone.

2. Anything shaped more or less like a mathematical cone.

3. Specif.: a A cone-shaped structure or building; as, the cone of a glass furnace. b A cone-shaped natural formation, as a mountain peak; as, a volcanic cone. See under ALLUVIAL and VOLCANIC. c Mach. A conical or conoidal piece or part, as a hardened steel race for ball bearings or a cone

The essence of the ceremony was the initiation of the bride into the worship of the household gods of her husband (cf. MANES, LARES, PENATES, VESTA), thus coming (until later times) under his manus. Confarreation was preceded by the traditio, in which her father released the bride from her ancestral worship, and the deductio in domum, in which she was taken to the house of her betrothed, who there pretended to capture her. The final ceremony was named from the panis farreus, or loaf partaken by the bride and groom together, before the household altar. Divorce for persons so wedded could only be obtained by diffarreation, in which the wife was formally excluded from worship of her husband's gods. This ceremony also took place before the hearth altar, in the presence of witnesses and a priest, and with the use of a loaf, probably rejected as a sign of divorce. To hold many of the higher, and especially the priestly offices, in ancient Rome it was necessary to be born in confarreation. The rite had fallen into general disuse in Justinian's time. A closely parallel ceremony was in use in ancient Greece.

2. Law. An admission by a party to whom an act or liability is imputed, in relation to such act or liability. A confession is judicial when made before a judge or court in due course of legal proceedings; any other is extrajudicial, whether made before an officer or other person. A judicial confession determines the issue to which it relates, except that a conviction cannot be had unless the corpus delicti be otherwise proved. An extrajudicial confession may be explained or rebutted; and no confession is admissible as evidence that is not entirely voluntary, and made without being induced by threats, promises, or hope of escape or favor extended by a person in authority. Cf. ADMISSION, 3.

3. Eccl. Acknowledgment of sins or sinfulness, esp. in a prescribed form in public worship; specif., the act of disclosing sins or faults to a priest or minister to obtain sacramental absolution. Auricular confession is a prescribed part of the sacrament of penance in the Roman Catholic Church, and is also voluntarily practiced by some communicants of the churches of the Anglican Communion. In the Lutheran Church the practice of confession is recognized, but as purely voluntary, and the minister has authority only to repeat the divine promise of forgiveness.

con-fes'sor (kŏn-fĕs'ẽr; 277: see note below), n. [OF. confessor, F. confesseur, fr. L. & LL. confessor.] 1. One who confesses; one who acknowledges a fault, or the truth of a charge, at the risk of suffering; one who avows belief in some one or something, esp. in religion or in Christ; specif., one who confesses himself a follower of Christ in the presence of danger and endures persecution for his faith.

He who dies for religion is a martyr; he who suffers for it is a confessor Latham

2. A priest who hears the confessions of others and is authorized to grant them absolution. The statements made to a confessor are not privileged communications at the common law.

☞ The historical accentuation confessor, as in Shakespeare (who uses both) and in later English poets, has now been mostly superseded, in both senses, by the later confessor.

the Con-fes'sor (the historical accentuation CON'FESSOR is preferred by some for this cognomen; see note under CONFESSOR, n.), Edward III., king (1042–66) of Saxon England; — a surname first bestowed upon him in a bull issued by Pope Alexander III., who canonized him in 1161.

‖ con-fet'ti (kŏn-fĕt'tē), n. pl.; sing. -FETTO (-tō). [It. Cf. COMFIT.] Bonbons; sweetmeats; confections; also, plaster or paper imitations of, or substitutes for, bonbons, often used by carnival revelers, at weddings, etc.

5. That in which faith is put or reliance had.

The Lord shall be thy confidence. Prov. iii 26.

6. Relation or state of trust or intimacy, or the intercourse existing between persons who confide in each other; as, I tell you in confidence that I am not going.

7. A communication made in confidence. Ld. Chesterfield.

8. Trustworthiness; reliableness; as, a person or man of confidence, a confidential agent. Obs.

Syn. — Audacity, effrontery, impudence, impertinence, presumption. — CONFIDENCE, ASSURANCE, BOLDNESS, HARDIHOOD, HARDINESS, APLOMB come into comparison as suggesting cool or unabashed bearing or behavior. CONFIDENCE, as here compared (see TRUST), may imply either proper self-reliance or obtrusive self-sufficiency; as, "Moneys in possession or in expectation . . . give a set to the head, and a confidence to the voice, and an assurance to the man" (Trollope); "My wife begun to complain to me of Willett's confidence in sitting cheek by jowl by us" (Pepys). ASSURANCE (see TRUST) is stronger than confidence; it implies either quiet self-possession (as, "I take assurance to be the faculty of possessing a man's self, or of saying and doing indifferent things without . . . uneasiness," Spectator) or cool impudence; as, "[She] fixed her eyes on my face, and examined it with a superb dignity of assurance that made me hardly know what I said" (Mad. D'Arblay); "I'm astonished at the deliberate intrepidity of his assurance" (Goldsmith). BOLDNESS, as here compared (see COURAGE), adds to assurance the implication of brazen or shameless demeanor; as, "a strumpet's boldness" (Shak.); cf. "Brand the bold front of shameless guilty man" (Pope). HARDIHOOD and (less frequently) HARDINESS, as here discriminated, imply presumption or audacity; as, "With the cool hardihood that always pertained to him, the young man continued his search of the drawers" (Hawthorne); "There were some in his day who had the hardiness to laugh at the stories of Tartarus, and Styx, and Charon" (Cowper). APLOMB (see etym., and cf. BALANCE) suggests assurance of poise and imperturbability of bearing; as, "We are to imitate, to use one of his [Whitman's] absurd and happy phrases, 'the satisfaction and aplomb of animals'" (Stevenson). See AUDACITY, COOL, SURE.

confidence game, trick (or the like). Any swindling operation in which advantage is taken of confidence reposed by the victim in the swindler. — confidence man.

8. Scots Law. a To ratify the right of (a person) to take and administer, as executor or administrator, property of a deceased person. b To vest or obtain title as executor or administrator to (property of a deceased person).
Syn. — Establish, strengthen, sustain, make good, ratify, attest, seal. — CONFIRM, CORROBORATE, SUBSTANTIATE, VERIFY, AUTHENTICATE. To CONFIRM is to give certainty, frequently to that which has been regarded as doubtful; as, to confirm a rumor, a suspicion; "It was expectation exquisitely gratified, superabundantly confirmed" (H. James). CORROBORATE (see etym.) suggests particularly the strengthening of one statement or piece of evidence by another ; as, the bystanders corroborated his story ; "Having considered the evidence given by the plays themselves. . . . let us now inquire what corroboration can be gained from other testimony" (Johnson). To SUBSTANTIATE is to establish or make good as fact or reality ; to VERIFY is to ascertain or establish as true or (esp.) as correct, frequently by examination or scrutiny ; to AUTHENTICATE is to confirm as genuine or entitled to credit ; as, to substantiate a charge or allegation by adducing proof, to substantiate a claim by evidence ; to verify a reference, a statement, an account ; to authenticate a document, a portrait ; "They . . . ask me whether you visit Weston this autumn. I answer, yes, and I charge you . . . to authenticate my information" (Cowper). See RATIFY.

As proofs of holy writ. Shak
4. Law. A conveyance by which a voidable estate is made sure and not voidable, or by which a particular estate is increased ; a contract, express or implied, by which a person makes that firm and binding which was before voidable. A confirmation will not affect a void estate. Specif.: Scots Law. A sentence — formerly of the commissary or bishop's court, now of the sheriff's court — empowering an executor, one or more, upon making inventory of the movables pertaining to the deceased, to recover, possess, and administer them. Erskine's Principles.
5. Eccl. In various churches, a rite supplemental to baptism, in the Roman Catholic and Eastern churches constituting one of the seven sacraments, by which a person is admitted to the full privileges of the church. In the churches of the Anglican Communion the rite consists in the imposition of hands by the bishop, with the invocation of the divine grace as defender and strengthener of the recipient, accompanied by the ratification of baptismal vows, prayers, etc. In the Roman Catholic Church, in addition to the imposition, the sign of the cross is made with chrism on the recipient's forehead. It is administered by a bishop, or by a priest if he is specially empowered to do so by the Pope. In the Eastern Church the rite is similar to the Roman, but it is customary to allow its administration by priests as well as bishops. In the Lutheran churches the rite is performed by the pastors, the principal feature being the renewal and ratification of the baptismal vow in catechetical exercises as a preparation for the first communion. In the Eastern Church, in conformity with the practice of the ancient church, the rite is administered immediately after baptism ; the other churches administer it to children only when they have reached years of discretion.

Syn. — Agree, correspond, harmonize, suit, fit; reconcile, settle, compose. — CONFORM, COMPLY, ADAPT, ADJUST, ACCOMMODATE agree in the idea of bringing or coming into correspondence. To CONFORM (to) is to bring into harmony or accordance with something, usually a pattern, example, or principle; as, to conform one's life to certain laws of conduct; "The author has conformed himself to the example of Homer and the precept of Horace" (Johnson). To COMPLY (with) is confined, in modern usage, to acquiescence in or fulfillment of wishes, requests, regulations, arrangements, and the like; as, "Think not my judgment leads me to comply with laws unjust" (Dryden); "I cannot comply with her kind invitation" (Cowper); "He came to solicit the same service . . . and I reluctantly complied" (id.). To ADAPT (to) is to fit or suit to something; it implies (esp.) modification to meet new conditions, frequently with the added suggestion of pliability or address; as, "'Tis a busy world, and well adapted to those who love to bustle in it" (Walpole); to adapt one's self to a new environment. ADJUST (to) implies close and exact conformity or correspondence, esp. such as exists between the parts of a mechanism; it suggests less of flexibility or tact, more of ingenuity or calculation, than adapt; as, to adjust (cf. to adapt) means to ends, one's self to one's surroundings; "Every nerve and muscle in Rosamond was adjusted to the consciousness that she was being looked at" (G. Eliot). ACCOMMODATE (to) implies, rather more than adjust, a somewhat marked variance or discrepancy between the objects brought into (often merely superficial) agreement or harmony, as, "Ask a portrait painter to describe his agonies in accommodating . . . faces . . . to the principles of his art" (Byron); "I think you have translated Tacitus very justly . . . and accommodated his thoughts to the turn and genius of our language" (Gray); to accommodate (cf. to adjust) differences. See AGREE, CORRESPOND.

con-gru'ence (kŏn-grōō'ĕns), con-gru'en-cy (-ĕn-sĭ), n. [L. congruentia.] 1. Agreement ; fitness ; suitableness ; congruity.

2. Geom. Coincidence of two figures when one is applied to the other.

con-gru'ent (-ĕnt), a. [L. congruens, p. pr. of congruere to agree, suit.] 1. Agreeing ; fitting ; suitable ; congruous.

2. Geom. Coinciding when one is applied to the other.

con-gru'ent-ly, adv. of CONGRUENT.

con'gru-ism (kŏn'grōō-ĭz'm), n. [L. congruus agreeing.] Theol. The doctrine that grace is given to those who will make a right use of it.

con'gru-ist (-ĭst), n. Theol. One who holds congruism.

con'gru-ous (-ŭs), a. [L. congruus.] 1. Agreeing ; fitting ; suitable ; congruent.

2. Math. Having the same ratio.

con'gru-ous-ly, adv. of CONGRUOUS.

con'gru-ous-ness, n. Congruity.

con'ic (kŏn'ĭk), con'ic-al (-ĭ-kăl), a. [Gr. κωνικός.] Of or pertaining to a cone ; cone-shaped ; tapering.

conical projection. Geog. A projection of the surface of the earth on a cone.

con'ic-al-ly, adv. of CONICAL.

con'ic-al-ness, n. Conicity.

con'ic-ism (-ĭ-sĭz'm), n. Geom. The doctrine of conics.

con'ic-i-ty (kŏ-nĭs'ĭ-tĭ), n. Conical form.

con'ics (kŏn'ĭks), n. pl. [Gr. κωνικά.] Geom. The science of the properties of the conic sections.

con'ic sec'tions. Geom. The curves formed by the intersection of a cone and a plane ; the ellipse, parabola, and hyperbola.

co-nid'i-al (kō-nĭd'ĭ-ăl), a. Of or pertaining to conidia.

co-nid'i-o-phore (-ō-fōr), n. [conidium + Gr. φορός bearing.] Bot. A specialized hyphal branch bearing conidia.

co-nid'i-um (-ŭm), n. ; pl. -IA (-ă). [NL., fr. Gr. κονία dust.] Bot. A nonsexual spore borne externally on a hyphal branch.

co-nif'er (kō-nĭf'ēr), n. [L. conifer cone-bearing ; conus cone + ferre to bear.] Bot. One of the CONIFERÆ.

co-nif'er-æ (-ē), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. An order of gymnosperms, mostly trees, with cones and needle-shaped or scalelike leaves, and including the pines, firs, cedars, cypresses, and yews.

co-nif'er-ous (-ŭs), a. Of or pertaining to the Coniferæ ; bearing cones.

co-nif'er-ous-ness, n. The quality of being coniferous.

co-nim'bus (kō-nĭm'bŭs), n. [con- + nimbus.] A cloud or mass of clouds.

co-nine (kō'nēn), co-nin (-nĭn), n. [L. conium hemlock.] Chem. A poisonous alkaloid, $C_8H_{17}N$, obtained from hemlock.

co-nin'gham-ite (kō-nĭng'ăm-īt), n. [From Conningham, Ireland.] Min. A hydrous sulphate of iron and aluminium.

con'i-ros'tral (kŏn'ĭ-rŏs'trăl), a. [conus cone + rostrum beak.] Zoöl. Having a conical beak.

con'i-ros'tres (-trēz), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. A group of birds with conirostral beaks, including the finches, buntings, and sparrows.

con'i-sa'tion (kŏn'ĭ-zā'shŭn), n. [F. conisation, fr. Gr. κόνις dust.] Surg. Cauterization by powdered caustic.

con'i-sa'tor (-zā'tēr), n. [F. conisateur.] Surg. An instrument for conisation.

con'ite (kŏn'īt), n. [Gr. κονία dust.] Min. A variety of limestone containing clay.

con-jec'tur-a-ble (kŏn-jĕk'tūr-ă-b'l), a. Capable of being conjectured.

con-jec'tur-al (-ăl), a. Of the nature of conjecture ; based on conjecture ; as, a conjectural emendation.

con-jec'tur-al-ist (-ăl-ĭst), n. One who conjectures.

con-jec'tur-al-ly, adv. of CONJECTURAL.

con-jec'ture (-tūr), n. [L. conjectura.] 1. Act of conjecturing ; guessing ; guess ; surmise.

2. Indication ; sign. Obs.

Syn. — See SUPPOSITION.

con-jec'ture, v. t. To guess ; to surmise ; to form an opinion of by guessing.

con-jec'ture, v. i. To form conjectures ; to guess.

con-jec'tur-er (-ēr), n. One who conjectures.

con-join' (kŏn-jōin'), v. t. [F. conjoindre, L. conjungere. See CONJUNCTION.] To join together ; to unite ; to associate.

con-join'ed (-jōind'), p. a. Joined together ; united ; associated ; combined.

con-join'ed-ly, adv. of CONJOINED.

con-join'er (-jōin'ēr), n. One who conjoins.

con-joint' (-jōint'), a. [F. conjoint, L. conjunctus.] Conjoined ; united ; associated.

con-joint'ly, adv. of CONJOINT.

con'ju-gal (kŏn'jōō-găl), a. [L. conjugalis, fr. conjux husband or wife, fr. conjungere. See CONJUNCTION.] Of or pertaining to marriage ; connubial ; as, conjugal love.

con'ju-gal-ly, adv. of CONJUGAL.

con'ju-gant (-gănt), n. [L. conjugans, p. pr.] Biol. One of a pair of conjugating cells.

con'ju-gate (-gāt), a. [L. conjugatus, p. p. of conjugare to join together, fr. conjux husband or wife, fr. conjungere. See CONJUNCTION.] 1. Joined together ; united ; coupled.

2. Bot. Having the leaflets in pairs.

3. Gram. Derived from the same root ; cognate.

4. Math. Having a mutual relation, such that each implies the other ; as, conjugate hyperbolas.

5. Zoöl. Having the fore and hind wings coupled together by a frenulum.

conjugate axis. Math. The diameter of a hyperbola which is perpendicular to the transverse axis.

con'ju-gate, n. Gram. A word derived from the same root as another.

con'ju-gate (-gāt), v. t. 1. To join together ; to unite ; to couple.

2. Gram. To inflect (a verb) through its various moods, tenses, numbers, and persons.

con'ju-gate (-gāt), v. i. 1. To unite ; to couple.

2. Biol. To undergo conjugation.

con'ju-ga'tion (-gā'shŭn), n. [L. conjugatio.] 1. Act of conjugating, or state of being conjugated ; union ; junction ; coupling.

2. Gram. a Act of conjugating a verb. b The inflection of a verb through its various moods, tenses, numbers, and persons. c A class of verbs inflected alike.

3. Biol. The union of two cells for the interchange of nuclear material.

con'ju-ga'tor (-gā'tēr), n. [L.] Mech. An instrument for illustrating the properties of conic sections.

con-junct' (kŏn-jŭngkt'), a. [L. conjunctus, p. p. of conjungere. See CONJUNCTION.] Joined together ; united ; conjoined ; associated.

con-junct'ly, adv. of CONJUNCT.

con-junct'ness, n. Conjunction.

con-junc'tion (kŏn-jŭngk'shŭn), n. [L. conjunctio, fr. conjungere to join together ; con- + jungere to join.] 1. Act of conjoining, or state of being conjoined ; union ; association ; combination.

2. Gram. A word used to connect words, clauses, or sentences.

3. Astron. The meeting of two heavenly bodies in the same degree of longitude.

4. Med. Adhesion of the eyelids.

5. Obs. Sexual intercourse.

con-junc'tion-al (-ăl), a. Of or pertaining to a conjunction ; conjunctive.

con-junc'tion-al-ly, adv. of CONJUNCTIONAL.

con-junc'tive (-tĭv), a. [L. conjunctivus.] 1. Conjoining ; connective ; uniting.

2. Gram. Of the nature of a conjunction ; as, a conjunctive word.

conjunctive mood. Gram. The subjunctive mood.

con-junc'tive, n. Gram. A conjunctive word.

con-junc'tive-ly, adv. of CONJUNCTIVE.

con-junc'tive-ness, n. Quality of being conjunctive.

con-junc'ti-vi'tis (-tĭ-vī'tĭs), n. [NL. See CONJUNCTIVA and -ITIS.] Med. Inflammation of the conjunctiva.

con-junc'ture (-tūr), n. [L. conjunctura.] 1. Act of conjoining, or state of being conjoined ; union ; connection.

2. Combination of circumstances ; crisis ; juncture.

con-jun'gate (kŏn-jŭn'gāt), a. [L. conjungatus, p. p. of conjungare to join together.] Bot. Conjugate.

con-jun'ga-ted (-gā-tĕd), a. Conjugate.

con-jun'ga-tion (-gā'shŭn), n. Conjugation.

con-jun'gi-ble (-jĭ-b'l), a. [L. conjungere to join together.] Capable of being conjoined.

con-jun'gi-bly, adv. of CONJUNGIBLE.

con-jun'gi-ble-ness, n. Quality of being conjungible

6. The whole body of Christians, or an organized body of believers in a particular locality; church; also, sect or denomination; — used by Tyndale to render ἐκκλησία, and hence by the English reformers instead of church, which was currently restricted to the clerical order. Obs.

7. New Eng. Hist. In the colonies in which the Congregational Church was established, the whole body of people of a settlement, town, or parish having its particular place of worship, now called the society or parish; — distinguished from the church, or body of communicants.

8. [cap.] Scot. Eccl. Hist. The Protestant party; also, a local body of this party.

From the repeated recurrence of the word congregation in [the First Covenant, subscribed Dec. 3, 1557] the chief subscribers were after this called Lords of the Congregation; and the people who adhered to them were called the Congregation. Hetherington.

9. R. C. Ch. a A company or order of religious persons under a common rule, either with or without vows. b A group of monasteries forming a subdivision of an order which agree to unite in closer ties of discipline and doctrine; as, the Congregation of Cluny (see CLUNIAC). c A permanent body or committee of cardinals to which is intrusted some department of the church business; as, the Congregation of the Propaganda, which has charge of missions. d A temporary committee of cardinals and ecclesiastics for special business. e At a general council, a body or committee of bishops to take measures for facilitating business, as by preparation of questions for debate.

10. An order of association of religious persons in some other churches; as, the Congregation of the Companions of the Holy Savior, in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Congregation of the Holy Cross, R. C. Ch., a community of lay brothers and priests, in France and the United States, engaged chiefly in teaching and manual labor.

con'gre-ga'tion-al (kŏn'grē-gā'shŭn-ăl), a. 1. Of or pertaining to, or of the nature of, a congregation; conducted, or participated in, by a congregation; connected with a particular congregation of worshipers; as, congregational singing.

2. Presbyterian Ch. Of or pertaining to the congregation as the lowest organized unit in the system.

3. [cap.] Belonging to Congregationalism, or to Congregationalists; holding to the faith and polity of Congregationalism; Independent; as, a Congregational church.

Congregational Methodist Church. See METHODIST, n.

con'gre-ga'tion-al-ism (-ăl-ĭz'm), n. 1. That system of church organization which vests all ecclesiastical power in the assembled brotherhood of each local church.

2. [cap.] The faith and polity of the Congregational churches, taken collectively. In this sense (which is its usual signification) Congregationalism is the system of faith and practice common to a large body of evangelical Trinitarian churches, which recognize the local brotherhood of each church as independent of all dictation in ecclesiastical matters, but are united in fellowship and joint action, as in councils for mutual advice, and in consociations, conferences, missionary organizations, etc., and to whose membership the designation "Congregationalists" is generally restricted; but Unitarian and various other churches also are congregational in their polity.

3. Connection with, or attachment to, a particular congregation, instead of the parish or district church, in a church territorially organized.

Con'gre-ga'tion-al-ist, n. One who belongs to a Congregational church or society, one who holds to Congregationalism; an Independent (the usual term in England).

Con'gre-ga'tion-er (kŏn'grē-gā'shŭn-ẽr), n. Obs. 1. Scot. Eccl. Hist. A member of the Congregation.

2. A Congregationalist.

con'gre-ga-tive (kŏn'grē-gā-tĭv), a. [L. congregativus.] Tending to congregate; marked by congregating. — con'gre-ga-tive-ness, n.

con'gress (kŏn'grĕs), n. [L. congressus, fr. congredi, p. p. -gressus, to go or come together, con- + gradi to go or step, gradus step: cf. F. congrès. See GRADE.] 1. Act of coming together; a meeting of persons or, formerly, of things; an encounter; interview.

Here Pallas urges on, and Lausus there:
Their congress in the field great Jove withstands. Dryden.

2. Sexual commerce; coition. Pennant.

3. A gathering or assembly; esp., a formal assembly, as of princes, deputies, representatives, or envoys; specif., a formal meeting of the representatives of several governments, societies, or bodies to consider and determine matters of common interest; as, the Social Science Congress.

Important international congresses are:

NAME; DATE.	ACTION.
Aix-la-Chapelle; 1818.	Agreed upon evacuation of France, which allies had occupied since fall of Napoleon.
Arras; 1435.	During Hundred Years' War; aimed to establish peace in Europe; England withdrew.
Berlin; 1878.	After Russo-Turkish war of 1877-78; established division of the states and dependencies of southeastern Europe as it now is.
Châtillon; 1814.	Napoleon and allies; dissolved because his demands were impossible.
Hague: first in 1899.	See INTERNATIONAL PEACE CONFERENCE.
Karlsbad; 1819.	German states, to deal with democratic movement; established censorship of press, suppressed the Burschenschaft, etc.
Kongo (at Berlin); 1884-85.	Recognized neutrality of Kongo Free State, etc.
Laibach; 1821.	Armed intervention to suppress republican rising in Naples and Piedmont.
Paris; 1856.	Decided upon terms of peace after Crimean War
Panama; 1826.	Called to form a conference of Spanish American states; later the United States invited to form an American policy; failure.
Pan-American; first in 1889.	See PAN-AMERICAN CONGRESS.
Troppau; 1820.	Sovereigns of Russia, Austria, and Prussia to consider questions raised by the Neapolitan revolution and to confirm Holy Alliance
Verona; 1822.	Agreed upon the armed intervention (1823) of France in Spain, against protest of England
Vienna, 1815	Settled affairs after Napoleonic wars, readjusting state divisions mostly as they now are.

4. The collective body of senators and representatives of the people of a nation, esp. of a republic, constituting the chief legislative body of the nation. See LEGISLATURE. The Congress of the United States (which took the place of the Federal Congress, March 4, 1789) is a bicameral body, the two houses of which are the Senate and House of Representatives (see these terms). The united body of Senators and Representatives for any term of two years for which the whole body of Representatives is chosen is called one Congress. Thus the session which began in December, 1907, was the first (or long) session, and that which began in December, 1908, was the second (or short) session, of the sixtieth Congress. When an extra session is had before the date of the first regular meeting of a Congress, that is called the first session, and the following regular session is called the second session.

5. [cap.] The lower house of the Spanish Cortes. See LEGISLATURE.

Syn. — Assembly, meeting, convention, convocation, council, diet, conclave, parliament, legislature.

con-gress' (kŏn-grĕs'), v. i. [See CONGRESS, n.] 1. To come together; to assemble. Mrs. Gore.

2. (pron. kŏn'grĕs) To meet in, or attend, a congress.

con'gress boot or gaiter (kŏn'grĕs). A high shoe or half-boot, coming above the ankle, and having the sides made in part of some elastic material which stretches to allow the boot to be drawn on and off.

con-gres'sion (kŏn-grĕsh'ŭn), n. [L. congressio.] A coming or bringing together, as in a public meeting, in a dispute or combat, in the act of comparing, or in sexual intercourse. Obs. or R. Jer. Taylor.

con-gres'sion-al (-ăl), a. Of or pertaining to a congress, esp. [cap.] the Congress of the United States.

Congressional district, one of the divisions, composed of contiguous and compact territory and containing as nearly as possible an equal number of inhabitants, into which (under act of Jan. 16, 1901) each State is divided to elect Representatives to Congress. The districts equal in number the number of Representatives to which the State is entitled, and no one district elects more than one Representative.

con-gres'sion-al-ist, con-gres'sion-ist, n. An adherent of a congress; one of a congressional party.

Con'gress-man (kŏn'grĕs-măn), n.; pl. -MEN (-mĕn). A member of the Congress of the United States, esp. of the House of Representatives.

con'greve (kŏn'grēv), n. [After Sir William Congreve, the inventor.] 1 Short for Congreve rocket, a powerful form of rocket formerly used in war, either in the field or for bombardment. In the former case it was armed with shell, shrapnel, or other missiles; in the latter, with an inextinguishable explosive material, inclosed in a metallic case. It was guided by a long wooden stick.

2. Short for Congreve match, an early friction match, containing sulphur, potassium chlorate, and antimony sulphide.

con'gru-ence (kŏn'grōō-ĕns), n. [L. congruentia: cf. OF. congruence.] 1. Suitableness of one thing to another; agreement, consistency, or correspondence, as with what is right or proper; harmony; congruity. Holland.

To show that they have such congruence as befits complementary sides or aspects of the same thing. J. Ward

2. Math. a Theory of Numbers. Divisibility with the same remainder, or this fact stated algebraically, thus: $x \equiv y\,(m)$. This congruence is read, x congruent to y, modulus m; it means that the integers x and y leave the same remainder when divided by the integer m. b Geom. The intersection of two complexes; the assemblage in space of all forms of the same kind that fulfill two conditions; specif., a continuous double infinity of lines in space, as all the bitangents to a surface. Its class (c) and degree (d) are the number of its lines that pass through any point and that lie in any plane. It is written (c, d).

3. Scholastic Theol. = CONGRUITY, 3 a. Obs.

congruences of higher orders, Math., those containing the unknown(s) in degree higher than the first, as a quadratic congruence, $ax^2 + 2bx + c \equiv 0\,(\mathrm{mod.}\ m)$.

congruence group. Math. A group composed of substitutions, $Z = \frac{as+b}{cs+d}$, where $ad - bc = 1$, and a, b, c, d, are integers satisfying congruences to a modulus m, the degree of the group.

2. Math. = CONGRUENCE, 2.

3. (pl. -CIES [-sĭz]). Logic. The relation of congruent propositions. See CONGRUENT, 3.

con'gru-ent (-ĕnt), a. [L. congruens, p. pr. of congruere: cf. F. congruent.] 1. Possessing congruity; suitable; agreeing; corresponding; congruous.

The congruent and harmonious fitting of parts in a sentence. B. Jonson.

2. Math. a Leaving the same remainder on division by the same integral modulus. See CONGRUENCE, 2 a. b Geom. = CONGRUOUS, 4 b.

3. Logic. Relating to, or predicable of, the same subject; differing from each other, but predicable as true of the same state of things; as, congruent propositions.

con'gru-ent-ly, adv. In a congruent manner.

congruently saturated solution, Phys. Chem., a saturated solution which during evaporation to dryness continuously deposits its solid phases; — disting. from an incongruently saturated solution, in which, under like conditions, one or more of the phases at first deposited are redissolved and disappear.

con'gru-ism (kŏn'grōō-ĭz'm), n. [Cf. F. congruisme.] Scholastic Theol. The doctrine that the efficacy of grace depends, not upon anything in the grace itself, but upon the fact that the grace is given by God under circumstances which, as He foresees, are congruous or suitable to the circumstances and state of soul of the recipient, or opportune for the free consent of the will to the acceptance of the offered grace.

con'gru-ist, n. Theol. One who holds the doctrine of congruism; specif., one of a party in the great dispute, which began in the 16th century in the Roman Catholic Church, as to the source and condition of the efficacy of grace.

con'gru-ity (kŏn-grōō'ĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [F. congruité.] 1. State or quality of being congruous, as one with another or with something referred to; agreement between things; conformity; harmony; correspondence.

A whole sentence may fail of its congruity by wanting one particle. Sir P. Sidney.

Accusations . . . which have no congruity with one another. J. Martineau.

2. An instance of congruity; a point of agreement, correspondence, etc. H. Spencer.

3. Theol. a With the Scholastics, the fittingness that God should bestow grace in response and proportionately to good works performed by a man in his natural state; merit acquired by good works performed by a person not in a state of grace, which it is suitable that God should reward proportionately; — opposed to condignity. b The suitableness or adaptability of the grace of God to the circumstances and state of soul of the recipient, to which the efficacy of the grace is by some attributed; efficacy of grace combined with free will. Cf. CONGRUISM, CONGRUIST.

4. Geom. Exact coincidence throughout; — said of figures superposed.

con'gru-ous (kŏn'grōō-ŭs), a. [L. congruus, fr. congruere to come together, to coincide, to agree; of uncertain origin.] 1. Suitable or concordant; accordant; harmonious; correspondent; conformable; consistent; congruent.

Not congruous to the nature of epic poetry. Blair.

2. Accordant to what is proper, reasonable, or right, or to the circumstances, facts, or requirements of the case; hence, suitable, fitting, becoming, proper, or the like.

It is no ways congruous that God should be always frightening men into an acknowledgment of the truth. Atterbury.

3. Gram. Conforming to the rules of concord. Obs.

4. Math. a Congruent. b Geom. Superposable so as to be coincident throughout.

Syn. — See CONSONANT.

con-hy'drine (kŏn-hī'drĭn; -drēn; 184), n. Also -drin. [conium + *hydr*ate.] Chem. A poisonous crystalline alkaloid, $C_8H_{17}ON$, closely related to coniine and occurring with it in poison hemlock (Conium maculatum).

con'ic (kŏn'ĭk) } a. [Gr. κωνικός: cf. F. conique. See con'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } CONE.] 1. Having the form of, or resembling, a cone; round and tapering to a point, or gradually lessening in circumference; as, a conic or conical figure; a conical vessel.

2. Of or pertaining to a cone; as, conic sections.

conical function, Math., a spherical function used in determining the distribution of an agent (as electricity) over a cone. — c. pendulum, Physics, a pendulum whose bob rotates about the vertical through the point of suspension, the string thus forming one of the generators of a cone. — c. point (of a surface), Geom., a double point at which an infinity of lines forming a cone of second degree meet the surface in three coincident points, all others through it meeting the surface in two coincident points. — c. refraction, Optics, the refraction of a ray of light into an infinite number of rays, forming a hollow cone. This occurs when a ray of light is passed through crystals of some substances, under certain circumstances. Conical refraction is of two kinds: external conical refraction, in which the ray issues from the crystal in the form of a cone, the vertex of which is at the point of emergence; and internal conical refraction, in which the ray is changed into the form of a cone on entering the crystal, from which it issues in the form of a hollow cylinder. The phenomenon was discovered by Sir W. R. Hamilton by a process of mathematical reasoning. — c. spiral, Math., a spiral, or helical, curve traced on the surface of a cone. — c. surface, Geom. See CONE, 1 c. — conic, or conical, projection, Cartography, a projection in which points on a spherical surface are projected upon a tangent cone, which is developed into a plane to form the map. The cone is taken tangentially to the earth's surface at the middle parallel of the region mapped. — conic section, Geom., a curve formed by the intersection of the surface of a right cone and a plane. The conic sections are named ellipse (defect), parabola (equality), hyperbola (excess), according as the square on any chord perpendicular to the axis falls under, equals, or exceeds the rectangle of the parameter and the vertical distance of the chord (Apollonius); or, analytically, according as the vertical equation is $y^2 = \frac{2b^2}{a}x - \frac{b^2}{a^2}x^2$, $y^2 = 4px$, or $y^2 = \frac{2b^2}{a}x + \frac{b^2}{a^2}x^2$. The circle is a conic for which the plane is perpendicular to the axis of the cone; the point, a doubly laid line, and two intersecting lines are degenerate conics, when the plane passes through the vertex. — c. sections, that branch of geometry which treats of the parabola, ellipse, and hyperbola. — c. vault, Arch., a vault of which the curved elements, usually arcs of circles, are larger at one extremity than at the other, and whose soffit is therefore conical in form.

con'i-ce'ine (kŏn'ĭ-sē'ĭn), n. Also -in. [So named to distinguish it from conicine (now named conine).] Chem. Any of several artificial alkaloids of the formula $C_8H_{15}N$, intermediate in composition between conyrine and conine. One of these is said to be seventeen times as poisonous as conine.

con'i-co- (kŏn'ĭ-kō-), a. [See CONIC.] A combining form

con'gre-ga'tion-al-ize, v. t. See con'gre-ga'tion-al-ly, adv. of CONGREGATIONAL. See -LY.

con'gre-ga'tor (kŏn'grē-gā'tẽr), n. [L.] One who congregates.

con'gress-er, n. One who congresses [congress. Rare.]

con-gres'sive (kŏn-grĕs'ĭv), a. Marked by congression. Obs.

Con'gress wa'ter. A saline mineral water from the Congress spring at Saratoga Springs, New York.

con-grue' (kŏn-grōō'; kŏn'grōō), v. i. [L. congruere See CONGRUOUS.] To agree; to be in harmony. Obs. & R. Shak.

con-grue'ly, con-gru'ly, adv. Congruously. Obs.

con'gru-ous-ly, adv of CONGRUOUS See -LY.

con'gru-ous-ness, n. See -NESS.

con-gust'a-ble, a. [con- + gustable] Having the same or a like taste. Obs. & R.

con'gy (kŏn'jĭ). † CONGEE.

con-hy'dri-a (kŏn-hĭ'drĭ-ă), n. Conhydrine.

coni. † CONY.

co'ni-a (kō'nĭ-ă; kō-nī'ă), n. [NL. See CONIUM.] Conine.

con'iac. Var. of COGNAC.

con'i-cal-ly, adv. of CONICAL.

con'i-cal-ness, n. See -NESS.

con'i-chal'cite (kŏn'ĭ-kăl'sīt), n. [Gr. κονία powdered lime + χαλκός copper.] Min. A hydrous basic arsenate of copper and calcium, occurring in green masses resembling malachite.

con'i-cine, n. Also -cin. Chem. Conine Obs.

co-nic'i-ty (kō-nĭs'ĭ-tĭ), n. Quality or state of being conical.

con'ics (kŏn'ĭks), n. Math. Doctrine of the conic.

co-nid'i-al (kō-nĭd'ĭ-ăl) } a. Bot. Pertaining to, resemco-nid'i-an (kō-nĭd'ĭ-ăn) } bling, or producing, conidia; as, the conidial stage of a fungus.

co-nid'i-o-phore' (-ĭ-ō-fōr'), n. [conidium + -phore] Bot. A special enlarged hyphal branch of the mycelium in certain fungi, which produces successive conidia by abstriction. — co-nid'i-oph'o-rous (-ŏf'ō-rŭs), a.

co'ni-fer (kō'nĭ-fẽr), n. [L. conifer; conus cone + ferre to bear: cf. F. conifère.] Bot. a Orig., a plant or shrub of the old order Coniferæ; hence: b In modern usage, any tree or shrub of the order Pinales, including not only those belonging to the pine family (Pinaceæ), which bear true cones or strobiles, but those of the yew family (Taxaceæ), in which the fruit is berrylike or drupaceous. In general the conifers are evergreen, and are thus commonly contrasted with broad-leaved or deciduous trees. The latter are, however, sometimes evergreen, while a few conifers are deciduous or even broad-leaved.

Co-nif'er-æ (kō-nĭf'ẽr-ē), n. pl. [NL. See CONIFER.] A group of gymnospermous trees now better known as the Pinales (which see). The Coniferæ have been variously treated as a family, as an order, and as a group of even wider scope, including the Ginkgoaceæ. The name is thus indefinite in its application. See CONIFER, GYMNOSPERMÆ.

co-nif'er-in (-ĭn), n. Chem. A crystalline glucoside, $C_{16}H_{22}O_8{\cdot}2H_2O$, in the cambium of coniferous trees, in asparagus, etc. It is hydrolyzed by emulsin, yielding glucose and co-nif'er-yl (-ĭl) (or co-nif'er-yl'ic [-ĭl'ĭk]) al'co-hol, $C_6H_3(OH)(OCH_3)C_3H_4OH$, a white crystalline substance.

co'ni-form (kō'nĭ-fôrm), a. Cone-shaped; conical.

con'i-ma (kŏn'ĭ-mă), n. [Native name.] The elemi obtained from trees of the genera Protium and Terebinthus. See ELEMI.

co'nine (kō'nĭn; -nēn; 184), n. Also co'nin, coniine, conia, etc. [From CONIUM.] Chem. A liquid alkaloid, $C_8H_{17}N$, with a stupefying odor, found in the poison hemlock (Conium maculatum). It is a derivative of piperidine and is a very powerful poison, producing paralysis of the motor nerves. The natural alkaloid is dextrorotatory, but the inactive and levo varieties have also been prepared.

con'ing (kŏn'ĭng), vb. n. Act of making conical, or the taper so produced.

co'ni-ros'tral (kō'nĭ-rŏs'trăl), a. a Having a conical bill. b Of or pertaining to the Conirostres.

Co'ni-ros'tres (-trēz), n. pl. [NL., L. conus cone + rostrum beak.] Zoöl. A group of oscine perching birds having the bill stout and conical. It is variously limited, including the finches and weaver birds, and often the tanagers. — co'ni-ros'ter (-tẽr), n.

Co-ni'um (kō-nī'ŭm, kō'nĭ-ŭm), n. [L., hemlock, fr. Gr. κώνειον.] 1. Bot. A genus of apiaceous plants containing two species, one African, the other (C. maculatum) the poison hemlock. The genus is distinguished by the ovate glabrous fruit with prominent wavy ribs and no oil tubes. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.
2. [l. c.] Pharm. A drug prepared from the fruit or leaves of the poison hemlock. See HEMLOCK.

con-ject' (kŏn-jĕkt'), v. t. & i. [L. conjectare.] 1. To conjecture; also, to plan or plot. Obs.
2. To augur or prognosticate. Obs.
3. To throw together, or to throw; to cast. Bp. Montagu.

con-jec'tur-al (-jĕk'tŭr-ăl), a. [L. conjecturalis: cf. F. conjectural.] 1. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of, conjecture; dependent on conjecture; fancied; guessed at.

> And mak'st conjectural fears to come into me. Shak.
> Who or what such editor may be, must remain conjectural. Carlyle.

2. Given to conjectures. "A conjectural critic." Johnson.

con-jec'ture (-tŭr), n. [L. conjectura, fr. conjicere, conjectum, to throw together, infer, conjecture; con- + jacere to throw: cf. F. conjecture. See JET a shooting forth.] 1. Inference from signs or omens; forecast; divination. Obs.
2. Inference from defective or presumptive evidence; variously: the act of making, or state of being absorbed in making, such inference; as, to be lost in conjecture; the inference or conclusion so drawn or deduced; surmise; guess; suspicion; as, a mistaken conjecture; often esp., a conjectural emendation or interpretation of a text; as, the reading is a pure conjecture; a ground of inference; a reason; as, conclusions based on valid conjecture.

3. Hypothesis; supposition. Obs. Shak.

con-jec'ture, v. i.; CON-JEC'TURED (-tŭrd); CON-JEC'TUR-ING. [Cf. F. conjecturer.] To arrive at by conjecture or to make conjectures as to; to infer conjecturally, or by way of surmise; to form opinions concerning, on grounds confessedly insufficient to certain conclusion.

con-jec'ture, v. t. To make or form conjectures; esp., to draw conjectural inferences; to indulge in surmise.

Syn. — Suspect, imagine, fancy, presume, think, suppose. — CONJECTURE, SURMISE, GUESS. To CONJECTURE is to form an opinion or judgment upon what is recognized as insufficient evidence; as, "We saw below us . . . a hut, which we conjectured to be a bark hut" (D. Wordsworth); cf., "Mysteries which must explain themselves are not worth the loss of time which a conjecture about them takes up" (Sterne). To SURMISE is to imagine, or to indulge a suspicion, upon still slighter grounds; as, "What thoughts he had beseems not me to say, though some surmise he went to fast and pray" (Dryden); cf. "surmises, guesses, misgivings, half intuitions, semiconsciousnesses, partial illuminations, dim instincts, embryo conceptions" (Lamb). To GUESS is properly to hit upon (or to attempt to hit upon), either at random or from uncertain or ambiguous evidence; as, to guess a conundrum; "I cannot see what flowers are at my feet, . . . but, in embalmed darkness, guess each sweet" (Keats). The use of guess in the sense of think or believe, although sanctioned by older usage, is now merely colloquial; when employed (as frequently in the U. S.) with reference to a fact or purpose about which there is no uncertainty, it is a vulgarism; as, I guess I'll go to bed. See INFER, THEORY.

con-join' (kŏn-join'), v. t.; -JOINED' (-joind'); -JOIN'ING. [F. conjoindre, fr. L. conjungere, -junctum; con- + jungere to join. See JOIN; cf. CONJUGATE, CONJUNCTION.] To join together; to unite; to join in action, purpose, etc.; to combine.

> The English army, that divided was > Into two parties, is now conjoined in one. Shak.
> Let that which he learns next be nearly conjoined with what he knows already. Locke.

con-join', v. i. To become or be conjoined; to unite; to be in conjunction, as heavenly bodies. Shak.

con-joined' (kŏn-joind'), p. a. 1. Being, coming, or brought together so as to meet, touch, or overlap.

> One event follows another; but we can never observe any tie between them. They seem conjoined, but never connected. Josiah Royce.

2. Her. a Joined; as, two lions conjoined under one head. b Touching, as muscles in a field lozengy. c Linked, as annulets.

Conjoined, 2 a.

3. Astrol. In conjunction, as planets.
4. Math. Having corresponding elements on one another, as when the lines of a pencil go through the corresponding points of a range.
conjoined in lure, Her., joined together with their tips downward; — said of two wings. — c. manipulation, Med., bimanual examination.

Conjoined in Lure.

con-joint' (-joint'), a. [F. conjoint, p. p. of conjoindre. See CONJOIN; cf. CONJUNCT.] 1. United; connected; associated; conjoined. "Influence conjoint." Glover.
2. Pertaining to, made up of, or carried on by, two or more in combination; joint. "A conjoint war" Wheaton conjoint degrees, motion, etc. Music. See CONJUNCT DEGREES, MOTION, etc.

con'ju-ga-cy (kŏn'jōō-gă-sĭ), n. The fact or character of being conjugate.

con'ju-gal (kŏn'jōō-găl), a. [L. conjugalis, fr. conjux husband, wife, consort, fr. conjungere to unite, join in marriage: cf. F. conjugal. See CONJOIN.] Of or belonging to marriage or the married state; suitable or appropriate to the marriage state or to married persons; matrimonial; connubial. "Conjugal affection." Milton.
Syn. — See MATRIMONIAL.

con'ju-gate (-gāt), a. [L. conjugatus, p. p. of conjugare to unite; con- + jugare to join, yoke, marry, jugum yoke. See YOKE.] 1. Yoked or joined together; united, esp. in pairs or in marriage; coupled; related.
2. Gram. Of the same derivation and hence usually of kindred signification; — said of words.
3. Bot. Bijugate.
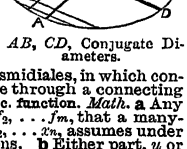
4. Math. Presenting themselves simultaneously and being interchangeable in the enunciation of properties; — frequently used in pure and applied mathematics with reference to two quantities, points, lines, axes, curves, etc. conjugate angles, Geom., two angles having the same sides. Their sum is a round angle, or 360°. — c. axis of a hyperbola, Math., the line through the center of the curve, perpendicular to the line through the two foci. — c. compound, Chem., as used by Dumas and later extended by Gerhardt, any of various substances formed by the union of two compounds with elimination of water. Obs. except Hist. — c. constituents of a determinant, Math., those symmetric with each other as to the principal diagonal. — c. deviation, Med., abnormal and persistent turning of two similar parts, as of the eyes, to one side at the same time. — c. diameters, Conic Sections, two diameters of a conic each of which bisects all chords parallel to the other. — c. directions (at a point of a surface), Math., the two directions given by any pair of conjugate diameters of Dupin's indicatrix at the point. — c. foci, Optics, two points so related that rays diverging from either one converge after reflection or refraction upon the other. — c. form, Bot., any alga belonging to the order Desmidiales, in which conjugation of the gametes takes place through a connecting tube between two distinct cells. — c. function. Math. a Any one of the m different values, $f_1, f_2, \ldots fm$, that a many-valued function of n symbols $x_1, x_2, \ldots xn$, assumes under the factorial-n possible substitutions. b Either part, u or v (both functions of rectangular coordinates x and y), of a monogenic function, $u + iv$, of the complex variable $x + iy$. — c. groups, Math., groups that belong to conjugate functions. See CONJUGATE FUNCTION a, and GROUP OF A FUNCTION. — c. hyperbolas, Math., two hyperbolas having the same asymptotes, the conjugate axis of each being the transverse axis of the other. — conjugate imaginaries, or complex numbers, Math., two differing only in the sign of the imaginary part, as $x + iy$ and $x - iy$. — c. lines (as to a linear complex), Math., two lines, being one the junction line of two poles, the other the intersection of the corresponding polar planes. — c. lines as to a conic, Math., two lines passing each through the pole of the other. — c. lines on a surface, Math., lines (of two systems) traced on a surface, whose directions at every point of intersection are conjugate directions. — c. mirrors, Optics, two mirrors so placed that rays from the focus of one are received at the focus of the other, especially two concave mirrors so placed that rays proceeding from the principal focus of one and reflected in a parallel beam are received upon the other and brought to its principal focus. — c. operations, Math., any two operations, as S and T: ST, of any group, whose T and T' are inverse operations; the second, $T'ST$, is the result of transforming S by T. — c. oval, Math., an oval forming with another oval a complete algebraic curve. — c. point, Math. a In the calculus of variations, the point A', the limiting position of the intersection of the original stationary curve AB with a neighboring stationary curve; — so called because A and A' are reciprocal. b Geom. An acnode. See ACNODE, DOUBLE POINT. c Either of two points lying (with respect to a conic) each on the polar of the other. — c. polyhedrons, Geom., two polyhedrons in which the faces and summits of each correspond to the summits and faces of the other. — c. quaternions, Math., two that have the same tensor and plane, but reversed angles. — c. radical, Chem., a complex radical regarded as a union of two or more simple ones. Obs. except Hist. — c. roots, Math., roots of an algebraic equation that are conjugate imaginaries. — c. solutions, the two corresponding solutions of two partially miscible liquids, one of the first liquid in the second, the other of the second liquid in the first. — c. spherical harmonics, Math., two harmonics of the same degree, the surface integral of whose product is 0. — c. tangents, Math., two tangents, at any point of a surface, such that the tangent plane at a consecutive point on either contains the other. — c. triangles, Math., two triangles in which the vertices of each are the poles of the sides of the other.



AB, CD, Conjugate Diameters.

con'ju-gate (kŏn'jōō-gāt), n. [L., pl., conjugata verba. See CONJUGATE, a.] 1. A word of the same derivation with another, and therefore generally resembling it in signification.
2. Anything conjugate or connected with another. Bacon.
3. Short for conjugate axis, diameter, radical, etc conjugate of a quaternion, Math., either of a pair of conjugate quaternions.

con'ju-gate (kŏn'jōō-gāt), v. t.; CON'JU-GAT'ED (-gāt'ĕd); CON'JU-GAT'ING (-gāt'ĭng). 1. To yoke or join together; to couple, specif., to unite in marriage. Rare. Sir H. Wotton.
2. Gram. To inflect (a verb), or give in order the forms which it assumes in its several voices, moods, tenses, numbers, and persons.

con'ju-gate, v. i. 1. To unite sexually; to copulate.
2. Biol. To fuse or unite in conjugation. See CONJUGATION.

con'ju-gat'ing (-gāt'ĭng), p. pr. & vb. n. of CONJUGATE.
conjugating tube, Bot., in certain lower algæ, as Spirogyra, a process developed from one cell which fuses with a similar process on an adjacent cell, forming a canal or tube through which the two protoplasts come together.

con'ju-ga'tion (-gā'shŭn), n. [L. conjugatio conjugation (in senses 1 & 4).] 1. Act of joining together, uniting, or combining; state of being joined together; union, assemblage; conjunction.
2. Something conjoined; a combination; an assemblage. Obs.

> Mixtures and conjugations of atoms. Bentley.

3. Logic. Connection of propositions by a common term so as to form the premises of a syllogism. Obs.
4. Gram. a A schematic arrangement of the inflectional forms of a verb, esp. one that is complete for voice, mood, tense, number, and person. b A class of verbs having the same type of inflectional forms. c Act of conjugating a verb, or of giving in order its various inflectional forms, either in whole or in part. d In the Semitic languages, one of several groups of inflectional forms belonging to a verb, including the forms of the simple verb and various derivative groups of forms which express changes of signification such as are expressed in Indo-European languages by derivative verbs and the distinction of voice. Thus, the seven usual conjugations in Hebrew express the simple active, an emphatic and a causal derivative, the three corresponding passives, and a reflexive.
5. Anat. Two conjoined parts, as any of the pairs of cranial nerves. Obs.
6. Biol. The fusion of two isogamous gametes or two unicellular organisms, involving a union of their nuclei or an interchange of nuclear material. Though male and female cells are not distinguished, the process is analogous to fertilization among higher organisms, serving to renew or increase the power of multiplication by mitotic division. In plants it is the common form of sexual reproduction among the lower thallophytes, the two gametes commonly forming by their union a thick-walled zygote. In many infusoria a temporary union is followed by greatly increased multiplication for many generations. See GAMETE.

con'ju-ga'to- (kŏn'jōō-gā'tō-). Combining form from Latin conjugatus, meaning conjugate.

con-ju'gi-al (kŏn-jōō'jĭ-ăl; 243), a. [L. conjugialis.] Matrimonial; — used instead of conjugal, to distinguish the Swedenborgian conception of marriage as a spiritual union corresponding to that of Christ and the church.

> Love truly conjugial, considered in itself, is an union of souls, a conjunction of minds. Swedenborg.

con-ju'gi-um (-ŭm), n. [L.] Rom. Law. The marriage tie.

con-junct' (-jŭnkt'), a. [L. conjunctus, p. p See CONJOIN.]

2. Logic. a Implication of a subject of attribution. Obs. b Implication of attributes or of meaning in general, as belonging to a given subject; also, the sum of the qualities forming the meaning of a term; intension; signification.

Syn. — See DENOTATION.

con-no'ta-tive (kŏ-nō'tă-tĭv; kŏn'ō-tā-tĭv), a. 1. Implying something additional; pertaining to connotation.

2. Logic. Bearing connotation.

It is urged that his graduated world of ideas ascends by steps from the less to the more general, ever more and more widely denotative, less and less fully connotative. J. Martineau.

connotative term. Logic. a A term which signifies primarily, an attribute, secondarily, a subject Obs. b A term which denotes a subject and implies one or more attributes.

con-note' (kŏ-nōt'), v. t.; CON-NOT'ED (-nōt'ĕd); CON-NOT'ING (-nōt'ĭng). [See CONNOTATE; NOTE.] 1. To suggest, indicate, or mean along with, or in addition to, the essential or primary signification; to imply secondarily; to involve as a consequence, concomitant, or the like.

Good, in the general notion of it, connotes also a certain suitableness of it to some other thing. South.

2. Logic. To imply as an attribute; bear as connotation.

The word "white" denotes all white things, as snow, paper, the foam of the sea, etc., and implies, or, as it was termed by the schoolmen, connotes, the attribute "whiteness." J. S. Mill.

con-nu'bi-al (kŏ-nū'bĭ-ăl), a. [L. connubialis, fr. connubium marriage; con- + nubere to veil, to marry. See NUPTIAL.] 1. Of or pertaining to, or inclining to, marriage, or the marriage state; conjugal; nuptial.

Kind, connubial tenderness. Goldsmith.

2. Of or pert. to a husband and wife; conjugal. Humorous.

Syn. — See MATRIMONIAL.

con-nu'bi-al'i-ty (-ăl'ĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). Quality or state of being connubial; connubial inclination or characteristic, as the expression of tenderness.

Some connubialities . . . between Mr. and Mrs. B. Dickens

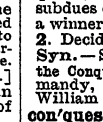
Co'no-car'pus (kō'nō-kär'pŭs), n. [NL.; Gr. κῶνος cone + καρπός fruit.] A small genus of tropical combretaceous trees or shrubs with smooth or silky-pubescent leaves and small flowers in dense buttonlike heads, whence they are known as button trees. Two species occur in the southern United States.

Con'o-clin'i-um (kŏn'ō-klĭn'ĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.; Gr. κῶνος cone + κλίνη couch; — in reference to the conical receptacle] Bot. A small genus of asteraceous plants allied to Eupatorium, having heads of blue flowers resembling those of the garden ageratum.

co'no-cu'ne-us (kō'nō-kū'nē-ŭs), n. Math. The surface traced by a line moving round a fixed circle and along, and perpendicular to, a fixed line; — so called as having the base of a cone but the edge of a cuneus (wedge). Walls first used the term (in 1662), applying it to one of the four quadrants into which the whole is divided by two lines quadrisecting the circle, one of them through and one perpendicular to the fixed line.

co'no-dont (kō'nō-dŏnt), n. [Gr. κῶνος cone + -odont.] Paleon. Any of certain minute toothlike fossils found in Paleozoic rocks. They have been regarded as teeth of cyclostomes, but are more probably the jaws of annelids.

co'noid (kō'noid), n. [Gr. κωνοειδής conical; κῶνος cone + εἶδος form; cf. F. conoïde.] 1. Geom. a A solid formed by the revolution of a conic section about its axis; as, a parabolic conoid, elliptic conoid, etc.; — more commonly called paraboloid, ellipsoid, etc. b A surface generated by a line moving along a given line and a given curve, and parallel to a given plane. c The surface generated by a circle arc rotating about its sine as axis.



Conoid.

2. Anything that has a conoidal form, as a rifle bullet.

co'noid, a. 1. Like a conoid; conoidal.

2. Zoöl. Of or pert. to the cone shells or the family Conidæ.

conoid ligament, Anat., the posterior fasciculus of the coraco-clavicular ligament, connecting the conoid tubercle on the under side of the clavicle and the base of the coracoid.

co-noi'dal (kō-noi'dăl), a. [Cf. F. conoïdal.] Like a conoid; resembling or approaching a cone in shape; nearly, but not exactly, conical.

co-noi'do- (kō-noi'dō-). Combining form for conoid.

Co-noph'o-lis (kō-nŏf'ō-lĭs), n. [NL.; Gr. κῶνος cone + φολίς a horny scale.] Bot. A genus of orobanchaceous herbs containing two species, the American (C. americana) being the squawroot. See SQUAWROOT.

Co'no-po-phag'i-dæ (kō'nō-pō-făj'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.; Gr. κώνωψ, κώνωπος, gnat, mosquito + φαγεῖν to eat + -idæ.] Zool. A small family of clamatorial birds confined to the warmer parts of South America, having a large head, the outer and middle toes connected near the base, and, in the typical genus, Conopophaga, a very short tail.

co-nor'mal (kō-nôr'măl), a. [co- + normal.] Math. Having common normals, as two (so-called) parallel involutes of an evolute.

co'no-scope (kō'nō-skōp), n. [Gr. κῶνος cone + -scope.] Cryst. A form of polariscope used for examining crystals in converging polarized light.

con'quer (kŏŋ'kẽr), v. t.; CON'QUERED (-kẽrd); CON'QUERING. [OF. conquerre, F. conquérir, fr. L. conquirere, -quisitum, to seek or search for, to bring together, LL., to conquer; con- + quaerere to seek. See QUEST.] 1. To procure by effort; to acquire; get; gain. Obs.

2 To gain or acquire by force, as of arms; to take possession of by violent means; to gain dominion over; to subdue by physical means; to reduce; to overcome by force of arms; to cause to yield; to vanquish; to subjugate. "If thou conquer Rome." Shak.

If we be conquer'd, let men conquer us. Shak.

4. To subdue or overcome by mental or moral power; to surmount; as, to conquer difficulties, temptation, etc.

By winning words to conquer willing hearts. Milton.

Syn. — Overpower, overthrow, discomfit, beat, crush, subject, humble, master. — CONQUER, VANQUISH, DEFEAT, SUBDUE, SUBJUGATE, REDUCE, OVERCOME, SURMOUNT agree in the idea of bringing under one's power by the exertion of energy or force. CONQUER usually implies the gaining possession or mastery of something (less frequently of some one), VANQUISH, the complete overthrow or discomfiture of some one (less frequently of something), by force; as, "We conquered France, but felt our captive's charms" (Pope); "a Roman by a Roman valiantly vanquished" (Shak.). Vanquish is more likely than conquer to refer to a single engagement. To DEFEAT is to beat or check, esp. for the time being; it does not imply the finality of vanquish; as, "But though defeated, the Cotton States were not vanquished" (Westm. Review); of, to retrieve a defeat. SUBDUE implies reduction to (frequently) permanent submission or subserviency; SUBJUGATE (see etym.), complete subjection, as under a yoke; as, "Who through faith subdued kingdoms" (Heb. xi. 33); "And the world's victor stood subdued by sound" (Pope); "a latent power in him which compels the favor of the gods, and subjugates fortune" (Thackeray). REDUCE, as here compared (see ABASE), implies a bringing to capitulation or surrender; it applies esp. to a beleaguered town or fortress; as, "reduced a province under Roman yoke" (Milton); the city was reduced by famine. OVERCOME implies, in present usage, esp. the getting the better of other than material objects; SURMOUNT applies esp. to difficulties and obstacles; as, to overcome temptations, bad habits, resistance; "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good" (Rom. xii. 21); "If the poem is a poem, it will surmount these obstacles" (Byron). See VICTOR, VICTORY, OVERTURN.

con'quer, v. i. To gain the victory; to overcome; to prevail; to be victorious.

The champions resolved to conquer or to die. Waller.

con'quer-or (-ẽr), n. [OF. conquereor.] 1. One who conquers; specif., one who wins a country, etc., in war, or subdues or subjugates a people, or overcomes an adversary; a winner; a victor, as in a game.

2. Deciding game; rubber, as at whist. Colloq.

Syn. — See VICTOR.

the Conqueror, a surname given to William, Duke of Normandy, who by the battle of Hastings, in 1066, became William I. of England.

con'quest (kŏŋ'kwĕst), n. [OF. conquest, conqueste, F. conquêt, conquête, LL. conquistum (prop. p. p. neut.), conquista, fr. L. conquirere. See CONQUER.] 1. Act or process of conquering, or acquiring by force; act of overcoming or subduing opposition by force, whether physical or moral; subjection; subjugation; reduction.

Three years sufficed for the conquest of the country. Prescott.

2. Act of gaining by struggle (lit. or fig.); as, the conquest of liberty or peace; she came down, dressed for conquest.

3. State of being conquered. Rare. "Convinced of conquest." Dryden.

4. That which is conquered; esp., territory definitively appropriated in war; a possession gained by force, physical or moral; specif., a person whose favor or hand has been won.

Wherefore rejoice? What conquest brings he home? Shak.

5. Feudal Law. Acquisition of property by purchase or other means than inheritance; acquisition; also, the property so acquired. In the Civil law such property acquired during marriage belongs to the community goods of husband and wife.

Syn. — Triumph, mastery, subjection. See VICTORY.

the Conquest, Eng. Hist., the subjugation of England by William of Normandy in 1066.

con'san-guin'i-ty (-ĭ-tĭ), n. [L. consanguinitas: cf. F. consanguinité.] 1. State of being related by blood or descended from a common ancestor; blood relationship; — distinguished from affinity. Cf. COGNATE, AGNATE. The degrees of lineal consanguinity are reckoned as one degree for each person in the line of descent, exclusive of him from whom the computation begins. This is so at the Civil, canon, and common law. At the Civil law, the degree of consanguinity between collaterals is reckoned by proceeding from one up to the common ancestor and then down to the other. At the common and the canon law the degrees between collaterals are found by taking the number from the common ancestor to either, or the more remote, of them. In the annexed diagram the Roman numerals express the degrees by the Civil law, the Arabic those by the canon and common law. Those in the vertical line are called lineal relations, those in the ascending line (the portion above the "Intestate") being called ascendants, those in the descending line (the portion below the "Intestate") being called descendants.

Consanguinity. Diagram showing Degrees of Consanguinity between a given person, called the "Intestate," or "Propositus," and lineal and collateral relations according to the common-law and canon-law computation (indicated by Arabic numerals) and the Civil-law computation (indicated by Roman numerals), lineal relations being represented by the disks vertically connected, collateral relations by those at the side.

7. Philos. Endowed with consciousness; possessing mental life, or psychical attributes.

8. Of the nature of consciousness; relating to consciousness; as, conscious state, or process.

The universal conscious fact is not "feelings and thoughts exist," but "I think" and "I feel." Wm. James.

9. Involving consciousness of something; as, conscious guilt or happiness; also, fig., affecting consciousness or causing consciousness of.

With conscious terrors vex me round. Milton.

Syn. — CONSCIOUS, AWARE. Conscious applies primarily to that which is felt as within, AWARE, to that which is perceived as without, one's self; as, he is aware of the charge against him, but conscious of his innocence; "Bitterly conscious . . . of her dull and heavy heart, with the frozen pain in it" (Hawthorne); "When Kirstie looked up at the speaker's face, she was aware of a change" (Stevenson). Conscious, as applied to external objects, stresses the element of sensation; aware, when used of what is within, the element of perception, more or less detached from feeling; as, "He was surely conscious, inexplicably conscious of some presence" (Stevenson); "I . . . was sufficiently aware of the tendencies of my own thoughts to do all I could to counteract them" (De Quincey). See SENSIBLE.

I do not know to the present moment whether he is aware that I was even conscious of his action. O Wilde conscious reflex, Psychol., an action regularly following upon the recurrence of the same conscious state. — c. to (something), privy to; cognizant of. Obsolete. — c. to one's self, consciously aware (of something) in relation to one's own mental states. Obs.

A man is always conscious to himself of thinking Locke con'scious-ness (kŏn'shŭs-nĕs), n. 1. Joint or mutual knowledge. Obs.

2. Immediate knowledge or perception of the presence of any object, state, or sensation.

Annihilate the consciousness of the object, you annihilate the consciousness of the operation. Sir W Hamilton

3. Specif.: Inward sense of guilt. Rare.

An honest mind is not in the power of a dishonest: to break its peace there must be some guilt or consciousness Pope.

4. That which includes knowledge, or knowing states, esp. knowledge of one's own existence, condition, sensations, mental operations, acts, etc.

Consciousness is thus, on the one hand, the recognition by the mind or "ego" of its acts and affections, — in other words, the self-affirmation that certain modifications are known by me, and that these modifications are mine. Sir W. Hamilton.

5. Philos. That state of being which is characterized by sensation, emotion, thought, or any psychical attribute whatever; mind in the broadest possible sense; that in nature which is distinguished from the physical; that form of existence which in its full development is able to distinguish itself from other existence. Consciousness has been considered by philosophers to be: (1) an attribute or condition of soul, or of spiritual substance not necessarily conscious; (2) itself a spiritual substance or self-dependent phenomenon; (3) an epiphenomenon, or dependent accompaniment of physical existence; (4) that of which all phenomena, physical as well as psychical, are forms; the ultimate form of existence.

A frank, unbiased study of consciousness must convince every biologist that it is one of the fundamental phenomena of at least animal life, if not, as is quite possible, of all life. C. S. Minot

Whenever there is any kind of feeling, there consciousness exists, and wherever consciousness exists, mind exists. Yet the two terms are not synonyms; consciousness is an abstract term, mind a concrete. G. F. Stout.

6 A state of consciousness or a form of mental activity.

Whatever marble may be in itself, all that we can know of it is under the shape of a bundle of our own consciousnesses. Huxley.

These ideas are to be found in the religious consciousness of the people, and it is the province of philosophy to see their theoretical necessity. W. T. Harris.

7. The totality of conscious states connected with any single organism, as a man, or with any group of mental factors closely interrelated, as one of the personalities in the phenomenon of multiple personality; a mind; a single mental life; also, any analogous totality attributed to a social organism; as, the mob consciousness.

Consciousness, then, does not appear to itself chopped up in bits. Such words as "chain" or "tram" do not describe it fitly as it presents itself in the first instance It is nothing jointed; it flows. A "river" or a "stream" are the metaphors by which it is most naturally described. In talking of it hereafter, let us call it the stream of thought, of consciousness, or of subjective life. Wm. James.

consciousness of kind, Sociol., "the original and elementary subjective fact in society; . . . a state of consciousness in which any being, whether low or high in the scale of life, recognizes another conscious being as of like kind with itself." F. H. Giddings.

5. A sweetmeat prepared and conserved with sugar; a confection; pl., preserves, as of fruit.

con-serve' (kŏn-sûrv'), v. t.; CON-SERVED' (-sûrvd'); CON-SERV'ING. [F. conserver, L. conservare; con- + servare to keep, guard. See SERVE.] 1. To keep in a safe or sound state; to save; to preserve from change or destruction.

Live still, my love, and so conserve my life. Marlowe.

2. To prepare with sugar, etc., for the purpose of preservation, as fruits, etc.; to make a conserve of. Obsoles.

Syn. — Keep, save, maintain, sustain, uphold; defend, protect, guard, shield, secure. — CONSERVE, PRESERVE agree in the idea of keeping or guarding. To CONSERVE, in present usage, is to keep something (esp. institutions, prerogatives, conditions) unimpaired or sound; it stresses the idea of maintenance of an existing condition; as, to conserve the liberties of the people; to conserve the advantages, while eliminating the evils, of party government; cf. a conservative measure. To PRESERVE (see DEFEND) is to keep or guard from danger, injury, or decay; it stresses rather more the idea of resistance to destructive agencies; as, "The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil" (Ps. cxxi. 7), "virtue preserved from fell destruction's blast" (Shak.); to preserve the peace; cf. a life preserver. See KEEP, SAVE.

con-sid'er (kŏn-sĭd'ĕr), v. t.; CON-SID'ERED (-ĕrd); CON-SID'ER-ING. [F. considérer, L. considerare, -sideratum, to consider, view attentively, prob. fr. con- + sidus, sideris, star, constellation; orig., therefore, to look at the stars See SIDEREAL; cf. DESIRE.] 1. To look at attentively; to inspect; examine. Archaic.

balance, of considering, deciding, dismissing" (H. James). To REFLECT (see etym.) is to turn one's thoughts back upon something; it implies quiet or serious consideration; as, "But those things, I reflected, were only part of life's open road, along which one had to trudge for one's affairs" (J. A. Symonds). To DELIBERATE (see etym. under a.) is to weigh mentally; it usually implies a pause for mature consideration; as, "Please you, deliberate a day or two" (Shak.). To PONDER (see etym.) is to weigh with long and anxious attention; as, "A mind might ponder its thoughts for ages and not gain so much self-knowledge as the passion of love shall teach it in a day" (Emerson); "Witness this weighty book . . . so nicely pondered, yet so strongly wrought" (Dryden). To MUSE (see etym.) is to be immersed in silent reflection; as, "Let him . . . read a certain passage of full poesy or distilled prose, and let him wander with it, and muse upon it, and reflect from it . . . and dream upon it" (Keats); "musing slow" (Collins). MEDITATE differs from muse in implying a more definite direction or focusing of thought; as, "Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them" (1 Tim. iv. 15); "The other, deep and slow, exhausting thought, and hiving wisdom with each studious year, in meditation dwelt" (Byron). To RUMINATE (see lit. sense) is to muse or to reflect (often placidly, sometimes stolidly) upon the same recurring themes; as, "That ruminating habit, that inward repetition of looks, words, and phrases, which makes a large part in the lives of most girls" (G. Eliot); "He might sorely have disturbed their placid but somewhat narrow ruminations with the germs of what was strange or beyond them" (W. Pater). See SCAN, THOUGHTFUL, PENSIVE.

4. Claim to notice or regard; importance or consequence.
Lucan is the only author of consideration among the Latin poets who was not explained for . . . the Dauphin. Addison.
5. A result of considering; a matured opinion; a reflection; as, considerations on the choice of a profession.
6. That which is, or should be, considered as a ground of opinion or action; motive, reason.
Some considerations which are necessary to the forming of a correct judgment. Macaulay.
7. A recompense, as for a service; a fee or compensation; specif., Law, that which is regarded as the equivalent or return given or suffered by one for the act or promise of another; an act or forbearance, or the promise of it, done or given by one party in return for the act or promise of another. The general conception and the name of consideration seem to have originated in the latter part of the 15th century. In general a consideration is presumed in case of a contract under seal (although this is changed in some States by statute), and in case of a negotiable instrument. Considerations are variously classified as good, valuable, continuing, etc. (see those terms). A consideration against public policy is void.
8. Law. A judgment of a court, — a translation of the Law Lat. consideratio.
Syn. — See REPUTATION.

con-sid'er-ing, prep. In view of; taking into account; as, he did well considering his limitations; — also used as an adverb or elliptically as a conjunction; as very well, considering; considering who he is.

con-sign' (kŏn-sīn'), v. t.; CON-SIGNED' (-sīnd'); CON-SIGN'-ING. [F. consigner, L. consignare, -signatum, to seal or sign; con- + signare, fr. signum mark. See CONSIST.] 1. A place of assembly; esp., a council chamber; hence, any solemn assembly or council, as that of the Roman emperor, of the Olympic deities, the saints and martyrs, of Freemasons of the 32d degree, etc.
2. A civil court of justice. Obs. Chaucer.
3. A church tribunal or governing body. See senses below.
4. A bishop's council having oversight of ecclesiastical affairs and composed of some of the leading clergy of his diocese. Such councils exist in the Eastern Church and were existent in the Western Church, as in England and Germany, in pre-Reformation times. In the Roman Catholic Church the term is now confined almost entirely to the papal consistory (see def. 6) and in the Church of England the consistory has become a court only (see def. 5).
5. Ch. of Eng. The spiritual court of a diocesan bishop held before his chancellor or commissary in his cathedral church or elsewhere; also, the place of holding its sessions. Its jurisdiction, now only over ecclesiastics, formerly embraced cases of marriage and divorce, wills, administration, tithes, ecclesiastical and moral discipline, etc.
6. R. C. Ch. The papal senate or a session of it. Its ordinary sessions, held about once a fortnight, are secret, and it is then composed of the college of cardinals, usually presided over by the Pope. Public sessions are also held, which are attended by other prelates besides the cardinals and by the representatives of foreign courts.
7. In some Reformed churches, as that in Holland, the lowest court, composed of the minister and elders of an individual church, corresponding to a Presbyterian church session. In the Reformed (Dutch) Church in America the deacons have always been in this court.
8. In the Reformed church in France, a higher court, composed of ministers and elders, corresponding to a presbytery.
9. In Lutheran state churches, a body of clerical officers usually appointed by the sovereign to superintend ecclesiastical affairs. The first was formed in Saxony in 1542. This body retained the name and many of the functions of the pre-Reformation bishop's consistory.

2. Ceramics. Apparatus for straining slip.

con-sols' (kŏn-sŏlz', kŏn'sŏlz; 277), n. pl. [Contr. of consolidated (annuities).] The British funded government securities. In 1751 a considerable part of the public debt of Great Britain, consisting of various public securities, chiefly representing debt contracted in the form of annuities at various rates of interest on the sum borrowed, was consolidated into one fund at 3 per cent interest, the account of which is kept at the Bank of England. This now constitutes more than half of the national debt. In 1887 the interest was reduced to 2½ per cent until 1903, and in the latter year it was again reduced to 2½ per cent until 1923. The market price of the stocks is regarded as a gauge of the national credit.

‖ con'som'mé' (kŏn'sŏ'mā'; kŏn'sŏ-mā'), n. [F., lit. p. p. of consommer to finish.] Cookery. Strong broth of meat and vegetables, concentrated till slightly browned, — in restaurants applied to thin soups such as would be made by diluting this broth.

The optic nerve responds to the waves with which it is in consonance. Tyndall.

2. Correspondence, accord, or agreement of sounds; specif., Music, a pleasing accord of sounds produced simultaneously, as of a note with its third, fifth, and eighth.

3. Physics. Sympathetic vibration; resonance. Some make a distinction between resonance and consonance, applying the former term to the sympathetic vibrations of connected parts, as the strings and sounding boards of an instrument, and the latter to that of independent things, as two musical strings, or two electric circuits.

Syn. — Agreement, accord, consistency, unison, harmony, congruity, suitableness, agreeableness.

con'so-nant (-nănt), a. [L. consonans, -antis, p. pr. of consonare to sound at the same time, agree; con- + sonare to sound: cf. F. consonnant. See SOUND to make a noise.]

1. Having agreement; congruous; consistent; according; — usually followed by with or to.

Each one pretends that his opinion . . . is consonant to the words there used. Bp. Berkeley
That where much is given there shall be much required is a thing consonant with natural equity. Dr. H. More.

2. Having like sounds.

Consonant words and syllables. Howell.

3. Music. Harmonizing; accordant, as tones or chords.

4. Consonantal.

No Russian whose dissonant consonant name Almost shatters to fragments the trumpet of fame. T. Moore.

5. Physics. Pert. to or exhibiting consonance; resonant.

Syn. — CONSONANT, ACCORDANT, CONSISTENT, COMPATIBLE, CONGRUOUS. CONSONANT (with or to) and ACCORDANT (with or to) express agreement or harmony with a concurrent circumstance, or conformity to an accepted standard; they imply the negation of discord, as, "She . . . first sounded their inclinations, with which her sentiments were always strictly consonant" (Fielding); "Any particular thing, consonant to the constant observation of ourselves and others" (Locke); "His conscience bore an accordant testimony with the world's laudatory voice" (Hawthorne); "Which of the senses is best accordant with the text" (Byron). CONSISTENT (with) denotes such agreement or harmony as implies the negation of contradiction, as, "What they wished was that their letters should be as kind as was consistent with proper maidenly pride" (De Quincey); "the consistency of the practice with good morals" (Cowper). Those things are COMPATIBLE which are capable of existing together in harmony; as, "If the proper aim of all human culture be to combine, in the highest measure in which they are compatible, the two elements of refinement and manliness" (Froude); "I know it [the translation] to be as exact as is compatible with poetry" (Cowper). CONGRUOUS (with or to) implies agreement or correspondence in nature or qualities; as, "Common sense dictated to writers the necessity of method, connection, and thoughts congruous to the nature of their subject" (Cowper). See CONGENIAL, CORRESPOND; cf. DISSONANT, INCONSISTENT.

con'so-nant, n. [L. consonans, -antis: cf. OF. consonant, consonante.] An articulate sound which in utterance is usually combined and sounded with a more open sound called a vowel; a member of the spoken alphabet other than a vowel; also, a letter or character representing such a sound. See Guide to Pron., §§ 49-70.

A consonant is the result of audible friction, squeezing, or stopping of the breath in some part of the mouth (or occasionally of the throat). The main distinction between vowels and consonants is, that while in the former the mouth configuration merely modifies the vocalized breath, which is therefore an essential element of the vowels, in consonants the narrowing or stopping of the oral passage is the foundation of the sound, and the state of the glottis is something secondary. H. Sweet.

con'so-nan'tal (-năn'tăl), a. Of the nature of a consonant; pertaining to or marked by consonants.

con'so-nant-ism (kŏn'sŏ-năn-tĭz'm), n. Use of consonants; a consonant formation, as by the consonantizing of a vowel; the consonant system of a language or dialect.

con'so-nant-ize' (-tīz'), v. t. Phon. To change into, or use as, a consonant. "The vowel is consonantized, that is, made closer in position." Peile.

con'so-nous (-nŭs), a. [L. consonus. See CONSONANT.] Agreeing in sound; symphonious.

con'sort (kŏn'sôrt; -sôrt; originally accented con-sôrt'), n. [L. consors, -sortis; con- + sors lot, fate, share: cf. F. consort. See SORT.] 1. A partner, companion, or colleague; now, fig. or specif.: a A wife or husband; spouse. Milton.

The snow-white gander, invariably accompanied by his darker consort. Darwin

b Naut. A ship keeping company with another.

2. [Cf. L. consortium fellowship, participation, or CONSORT, v.] An assembly or association of persons; a company; a group, a combination. Obs. or R.

In one consort there sat
Cruel revenge and rancorous despite. Spenser.

3. Concurrence or accord; conjunction; combination; association. "Working in consort." Hare.

Take it singly, and it carries an air of levity; but, in consort with the rest, has a meaning quite different. Atterbury.

4. [Perh. confused with concert.] Harmony of sounds; concert, as of musical instruments; also, a producing of such harmony, or the music produced; a concert. Obs. or Hist.

Come let us join our mournful song with theirs. Spenser.

5. A group of jointly performing musicians. Obs.

consort of viols, Music, a set of four viol instruments played together.

con-sort' (kŏn-sôrt'), v. i.; CON-SORT'ED; CON-SORT'ING. [See CONSORT a company.] 1. To unite or to keep company; to associate.

2. To escort or attend; accompany. Obs.

Thou, wretched boy, that didst consort him here, Shalt with him hence. Shak.

3. To harmonize or sound in harmony. Obs.

con'sound (kŏn'sound; kŏn-sound'), n. [F. consoude, fr. L. consolida comfrey, con- + solidus solid, cf. consolidare to make solid. Cf. COMFREY, CONSOLIDATE.] Orig., a plant supposed to possess healing properties, identified by some with the comfrey; later, also, the bugle, daisy, and field larkspur (Delphinium consolida). The herbalists distinguished several species of a so-called genus Consolida, each referring to one of the above-named plants.

2. Paste, dough.

con-spic'u-ous (-spĭk'ū-ŭs), a. [L. conspicuus, fr. conspicere to get sight of, to perceive; con- + specere, specere, to look. See SPY.] Obvious to the eye or mind; plainly visible, manifest; hence, attracting or tending to attract attention, as by reason of size, brilliance, contrast, or station; striking; eminent; distinguished.

Conspicuous as the brightness of a star Couper.
A man who holds a conspicuous place in the political, ecclesiastical, and literary history of England Macaulay.

Syn. — Distinguished, eminent, famous, illustrious, celebrated. See PROMINENT.

— con-spic'u-ous-ly, adv. — con-spic'u-ous-ness, n.

con-spir'a-cy (-spĭr'ă-sĭ), n.; pl. -CIES (-sĭz). [See CONSPIRATION.] 1. Act of conspiring; combination of men for an evil purpose, an agreement between two or more persons to commit a crime in concert, as treason, a plot.

I had forgot that foul conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban and his confederates. Shak.

2. A concurrence or general tendency, as of circumstances, to one event; harmonious action.

A conspiracy in all heavenly and earthly things. Sir P. Sidney.

3. Law. An agreement, manifesting itself in words or deeds, by which two or more persons confederate to do an unlawful act, or to use unlawful means to do an act which is lawful; confederacy.

Syn. — CONSPIRACY, PLOT, INTRIGUE, MACHINATION. A CONSPIRACY, as here compared (see defs for legal usage), is a combination, usually secret, of persons for evil or unlawful ends; as, "Certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themselves under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul. And they were more than forty which had made this conspiracy" (Acts xxiii. 12, 13); "There's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy against me" (Shak.). PLOT stresses more strongly than conspiracy the idea of a carefully devised and secret plan or contrivance for mischievous or treacherous ends; it may or may not involve more than one person; as, "the artfulest, the wisest, the most toilsome and dexterous plot builders in the world" (Thackeray); "Our indiscretion sometimes serves us well, when our deep plots do pall" (Shak.). INTRIGUE (see etym) usually implies more complicated scheming than plot, and more petty or underhand dealings; as, "The diplomatic maneuvers and intrigues in which she [Elizabeth] excelled" (J. R. Green); "Mr. Swift hath finely described that passion for intrigue, that love of secrecy, slander, and lying, which belongs to weak people, hangers-on of weak courts" (Thackeray). With similar implications, intrigue is frequently used of a clandestine love affair; as, "Now love is dwindled to intrigue" (Swift). MACHINATION (usually pl.) emphasizes the crafty and tortuous processes of plotting or intriguing; as, "Tortured by some black trouble of the soul, and given over to the machinations of his deadliest enemy" (Hawthorne). See COMBINATION, ARTIFICE, PLAN.

Conspiracy of Am'boise' (ăN'bwaz'), F. Hist., an unsuccessful Huguenot plot in 1560 to remove King Francis II. from the influence of the Guises, and carry into power the Prince of Condé.

2. To unite to produce; concur to. Obs. Oxf. E. D.

con'sta-ble (kŭn'stă-b'l, 277), n. [ME. conestable, conestable, a constable (in sense 1), OF. conestable, F. connétable, LL. conestabulus, comes stabuli, orig., count of the stable, master of the horse, equerry; comes count (L. companion) + L. stabulum stable. See COUNT a nobleman; STABLE.] 1. A high officer in the monarchial and princely establishments of the Middle Ages. From being, as the name denotes, chief groom of the stable, the constable became the chief officer of the household, army, or the like. The Constable of France became the first officer of the crown, and as such commander in chief of the army and supreme judge of the military courts and the courts of chivalry, with other minor powers. The office was abolished in 1627; it was revived by Napoleon I., but discontinued upon his overthrow. The Constable, or Lord High Constable, of England was likewise one of the highest officers of the crown, commander in chief of the forces, and a high judicial officer. The office was forfeited by attainder by Edward Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, in 1521, and has been revived only for special occasions, as at the coronation of the sovereigns. The Constable of Scotland was a similar officer, whose title now remains only as a hereditary dignity of the earls of Errol.

2. The warden or keeper of a royal castle or fortress or of a fortified town. The office survives as the official title of the warden of the Tower of London and of Dover and Windsor castles, appointed by the crown

3. Orig., a military officer; now, any of various officers of the peace having power as a conservator of the public peace, and bound to execute the warrants of judicial officers.

4. Specif., In Great Britain: a The high constable, an officer of a hundred or other large district originally charged with certain military duties. The office became practically obsolete as the result of the High Constable Act of 1869. b The petty constable, a parish or township officer appointed as conservator of the peace, to execute the process of the justices of the peace, etc. The petty constable has now been generally superseded by the county police. c A member of the county police, also called the county constabulary, the chief officer of which is called the chief constable. d Any of several officials of the Channel Islands, Jersey, or Guernsey, with somewhat similar functions.

con'sta-ble-wick' (-wĭk'), n. [constable + wick a village.] The office, jurisdiction, or district of a constable.

con-stab'u-la-ry, n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). 1. a The office of a constable. Obs. b A constablewick.

2. The collective body of constables in any town, district, or country.

3. An armed force of a civil government, distinct from the regular army; a police force of a country or dependency, organized on military lines; as, the Philippines Constabulary; the Royal Constabulary of Ireland. In the Philippines the Constabulary consists of enlisted native soldiers with American officers.

con'stan-cy (kŏn'stăn-sĭ), n. [L. constantia. See CONSTANT.] 1. Steadfastness or firmness of mind; persevering resolution; esp., firmness under sufferings, steadiness in attachments, or perseverance in enterprise; fidelity.

A fellow of plain uncoined constancy Shak
Constancy and contempt of danger. Prescott.

2. State or quality of being constant or steadfast; freedom from change, stability; fixedness; immutability.

That finds no object worth its constancy. Shelley.

3. A thing that is permanent. C. E. Craddock.

4. A Japanese stonecrop (Sedum sieboldii) cultivated for its abundant pink flowers.

Syn.—Attachment, adherence, faith, steadfastness; loyalty, fealty, allegiance; truth, honesty, integrity; devotedness, ardor, eagerness, earnestness, zeal.—CONSTANCY, FIDELITY, FAITHFULNESS, DEVOTION. CONSTANCY, as here compared (see FIRMNESS), implies steadfastness of attachment or adherence, esp. in love or friendship; as, "While thou livest, dear Kate, take a fellow of plain and uncoined constancy; for he perforce must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places" (Shak.); "Or was . . . of constancy no root infixed, that either they love nothing or not long" (Milton). FIDELITY implies unswerving loyalty or allegiance, not only to a person, but also to a principle, a duty, a trust; as, "Who, being a simple-hearted woman, with but one rule of faith and right, never thought of swerving from her fidelity to the exiled family" (Thackeray); "Fidelity to engagements is a virtue" (Bentham). Fidelity is often used of exact adherence or literal correspondence to an original; as, "There are minutiæ in every language which transfused into another will spoil the version. Such extreme fidelity is in fact unfaithful" (Cowper). FAITHFULNESS frequently implies a warmer or more personal relation than fidelity; as, "To show forth thy lovingkindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night" (Ps. xcii. 2). DEVOTION, as here compared (see DEVOUT), suggests great strength or ardency of attachment or loyalty; as, "It shows my earnestness of affection . . . my devotion" (Shak.); "Insectlike devotion to a creed" (J. A. Symonds); "With that devotion we bestow when goddesses appear below" (Swift). See LOYALTY, ATTACHMENT.

con'stant (kŏn'stănt), a. [L. constans, -antis, p. pr. of constare to stand firm, to be consistent; con- + stare to stand: cf. F. constant. See STAND; cf. COST, v. t.] 1. Firm or steadfast; resolute; also, faithful, true.

Both loving one fair maid, they yet remained constant friends.
Sir P. Sidney

I am constant to my purposes. Shak.

2. Fixed or invariable; uniform; specif., Math. & Physics, remaining unchanged or invariable, as a quantity, force, law, error.

Unstaid and skittish in all motions else
Save in the constant image of the creature
That is beloved. Shak.

3. Continually recurring; regular; persistent; perpetual.

The constant creaking of a country sign. Cowper.

4. Consistent. Obs.

5. Firm or steady; immovable; solid,—sometimes opposed to fluid. Obs.

If you mix them, you may turn these two fluid liquors into a constant body. Boyle

6. Confident; positive; also, certain. Obs.

Syn.—Firm, steadfast, faithful. See CONTINUAL.

constant error. a Math. See ERROR. b Psychol. A persistent error, either positive or negative, in judgments or perceptions of a real magnitude.—c. quantity. Math. = CONSTANT, n., 2.—c. white. = PERMANENT WHITE.

con'stant, n. 1. That which is not subject to change; that which is invariable.

2. Physics, etc. A numerical quantity expressing some physical law or magnitude as a fixed relation, or expressing a condition of adjustment of an instrument of precision, or a natural property or condition of a substance, which retains the same value throughout an investigation or process provided the conditions remain unchanged; as, the constant or aberration; the collimation constant of a transit instrument; the dielectric constant of quartz.

3. Math. A magnitude that is supposed not to change its value in a certain discussion or stage of investigation;—distinguished from a variable; but constants at one stage of the investigation are often variables at another. A constant that has the same value under all circumstances, as the number 10, is called an absolute constant.

constant of aberration, or aberration constant, Astron., a number which by substitution in the general formula for aberration enables a prediction to be made of the effect of aberration on a star anywhere situated. Its value is 20″.47. —c. of capillarity. Physics. See SURFACE TENSION.—c. of gravitation, Physics, the acceleration per unit of time produced by the attraction of a unit of mass at unit distance. It has been determined to be 6.6579×10^{-8} in C. G. S. units. Its symbol is g.—c. of integration, Math., an arbitrary constant that may be added to every result of indefinite integration.—c. of refraction. = SPECIFIC REFRACTIVE POWER.

con'stel-late (kŏn'stĕl-lāt; kŏn-stĕl'lāt), v. i.; CON'STEL-LAT'ED (-lāt'ĕd; -ăt-ĕd); CON'STEL-LAT'ING (-ĭng). [con- + L. stellatus, p. p. See STELLATE.] To join luster; to shine with united radiance, or one general light. Rare.

The several things which engage our affections . . . shine forth and constellate in God. Boyle

con'stel-late, v. t. 1. Astrol. Obs. a To affect with stellar influence. b To cast the horoscope of. Oxf. E. D. c To fashion under, or be determined or destined by, an especial conjunction of planets.

2. To unite in one luster or radiance, as stars.

Who know how to constellate these lights. Boyle

3. To set or adorn with stars or constellations; as, constellated heavens; to stud. J. Barlow.

con'stel-la'tion (kŏn'stĕl-lā'shŭn), n. [F. constellation, L. constellatio.] 1. Configuration of the stars, esp. at one's birth (cf. HOROSCOPE); hence, character or disposition as determined by one's stars.

It is constellation, which causeth all that a man doeth. Gower.
Happy constellations on that hour
Shed their selectest influence Milton.

2. Any one of a number of arbitrary groups of fixed stars, or a division (with imaginary outlines) of the stellar heavens including such a group. Each of the early constellations is named after some mythological personage, animal, or inanimate object whose image has a fancied correspondence to the configuration of the stars. Many constellations are of great antiquity; others, esp. in the southern hemisphere, are modern. In each of the constellations now recognized by astronomers (about 90 in number) the brightest stars, both named and unnamed, are designated nearly in the order of brilliancy by the letters of the Greek alphabet; as, α Tauri (Aldebaran) is the first star of Taurus, γ Orionis (Bellatrix) is the third star of Orion.

6. The fundamental, organic law or principles of government of a nation, state, society, or other organized body of men, embodied in written documents, or implied in the institutions and customs of the country or society; also, a written instrument embodying such organic law, and laying down fundamental rules and principles for the conduct of affairs. The British constitution belongs to what are called unwritten constitutions, and any customary, rule of action, or ordinary act of Parliament may be modified by an ordinary act of Parliament. The Constitution of the United States belongs to the class of rigid constitutions, and cannot be modified in its expression itself except through such proceeding as the Constitution ordains. Gradual and essential changes take place in the effect of the Constitution's unconscious growth and written constitutions through given to both customary law by the judiciary. The Constitution of the United States was framed at Philadelphia in 1787 by a convention called because of the failure of the Articles of Confederation to provide an effective national government. It was adopted and signed on Sept. 17, 1787, by representatives of all the thirteen original States except Rhode Island; and by August, 1788, it had been ratified by eleven States, and went into effect between them. Amendments I to X (the Bill of Rights) were ratified (by eleven States) between Nov. 20, 1789, and Dec. 15, 1791; Amendments XI and XII were adopted in 1798 and 1804, respectively; Amendments XIII, XIV, and XV were adopted in 1865, 1868, and 1870, respectively.
